The Traveling Library.

For the benefit of our readers we will say that Mr. Peterhaus is trying to establish a station to the New Parmelee System of Traveling Library. The plan is practically the same as that in vogue in Chicago and other large cities; that is, a Central Library is divided up into sections or divisions and sent to different parts of the city, but in this case, of course, the Central Library is the home office of the company and the sections are placed in different states.

The day has gone by when it is necessary to tell an intelligent community that they need a library; this is granted, the only question is, "How can one best be established and maintained?"

We have tried the old plan, that is, the purchase of all the books we wanted, and it has proven repeatedly a failure. These "old" libraries were, as a rule, all right for a few months, but as it was necessary in about a year to purchase an entirely new line, this burdensome purchase was never made, and the old library naturally died out.

Under the traveling plan, of course, but one "Central" Library needs be purchased and it will supply a great many towns; in other words, the cost to the community for twenty libraries is not more than one would be on the old plan.

If the station is established at this town, of course arrangements must be made with Mr. Peterhaus in order that the exchange of libraries may be made with the other towns in this community which have already secured them. Northville and other near-by towns already have stations. It is a thing that should interest any father or mother and have the support of everyone who appreciates education.

ARE YOU EVER HOMESICK?

In Some Cases the Feeling Really Becomes a Disease.

Few of us there are who have never known the pangs of homesickness, and those few are rather to be pitied than envied. Homesickness in mild form is a sign of a gentle mind, and indicates the possession of a love of home and country which is the characteristic of civilized and normal man. This mild form, fortunately, is the only kind that most of us have experienced, for when the severe form takes possession of a person it is a terrible disease, causing untold misery and even death. This severe form, usually called nostalgia, has grown less common in these days of quick communication, of rapid transmission of news, and of a wide spread knowledge of geography. The element of ignorance of one's surroundings and consequent sense of helplessness and despair of ever seeing home again, which in times gone by so oppressed the sufferer from nostalgia, is now removed, except in the case of the very young, or the densely ignorant. The victim of this extreme form of homesickness is almost always a resourceless person, one whose life is a routine of trivialities, whose ideals are few and limited, and such as they are, based upon familiar objects and well-known associates. When such a person is placed in new surroundings no new ideas are created, but there is a gnawing longing for the past, which is the more intense as a return seems impossible. The patient, for such he really is, broods over what he has lost, rejects what is offered in place of it, and becomes apathetic and taciturn. Sleep becomes fitful, and is disturbed by vivid dreams of home. The appetite fails, digestion grows poor, and the sufferer becomes thin and haggard. There is headache, with dullness of intellect, and, finally, perhaps a condition of complete indifference to everybody and everything, which may end in death from a failure of the vital organs to perform their functions. There is little to do for cases of this sort where there is no possibility of a return home, though sometimes a study of the map and of the routes by which return can be made, and the birth of a hope that conditions may be changed and the separation from the beloved spot not be final, may bring about a restoration to mental health, especially if the hope is based upon the sufferer's own efforts to that end.—Youth's Companion.

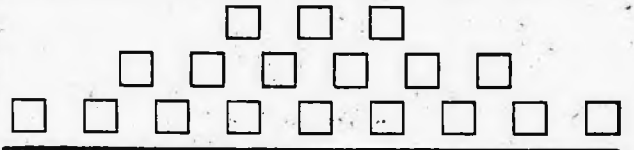

AN AUDACIOUS THIEF.

Disastrous Piece of Work of a Saucy Tomtit.

A country gentleman of Cheshire was once sent galloping twenty miles to fetch the police to catch the thief who had stolen a check from inside an envelope which was inside his own letter box in his own hallgate—all through a tomtit, says Longman's Magazine. The envelope and the covering letter were there, but the whereabouts of the check might have remained as great a mystery as any Thames embankment robbery in open daylight, but that when the gentleman and the police arrived and proceeded solemnly to inspect the letter box two tomitts were discovered inside. This led to a search and twenty yards off, lying on the ground, with black marks upon it, was the check. Whether the tomitts had returned to find out in whose name they should forge an indorsement to the check is not clear, but this new development of the criminal tendency, which has always been latent in the whole race of tits, cannot be too strongly reprobated. Even the jackdaw of Rheims, the "horrid example" of larcenous birdhood, would never have stolen a check. When he perched on the cardinal's signet ring and suffered terribly from the pip when excommunicated for his crime, he had sufficient good feeling to repent heartily and bring back the stolen jewel. Its glitter had appealed, too, more to his sense of beauty than to any sordid love of filthy lucre. He stole the ring to be a thing of beauty and a sparkling joy in his dark niche under the belfry, rather than with a view to pawning or selling it and spending the proceeds in riotous living.

What Is Newest to Dangle from the Chatelaine.

If you would be fashionable you must have a fine gold and enamel charm hanging from your watch chain, or a four-leaf shamrock incased in a crystal heart-shaped locket, with a gold chain; or you may fall back on a pig in diamonds, or a cat, or a pretty little minstrel playing a guitar, seated in the crescent moon. Fiddles and banjos dangle from the long chains, and so do woodcocks, fox terriers and salmon, these charms being occasionally transferred to the bracelets, for a woman of fashion must perform a "music wherever she goes," and her approach is always heralded nowadays by a jingle of jewelry. The lucky bean charm has a tiny diamond at the top, and a bear in diamonds carries a balancing pole with a pearl at each end. Offenses have been combined with diamonds in frogs, scorpions and tortoises.

C. H. B. in Monterey.

Monterey, Mexico, March 4, 1899.

PLYMOUTH MAIL.
 Plymouth, Mich.

Well, here I am writing you again upon the eve of my departure and after a stay of two days in the above city. As I wrote in my last letter, Monterey is known as the Chicago of Mexico and now, being upon the point of leaving it, after a most careful survey of its buildings, streets and industries, I feel that I owe the good Lord a prayer for the man who had nerve enough to whisper the word "Monterey in the same breath with the word Chicago." Yet in another sense I must confess that I have never yet found anything to even compare with the remarkable scenes and strange customs of these natives and their cities. It is all like a trance or long dream which at times takes on the fantastic, and not always pleasing, forms of a nightmare. It just seems as if one were lying in the dim past, in the old ages that have long since passed away and my poor pen and poorer English can never paint for you the quaint and fascinating scenes through which I am daily passing, but having started I will continue as best I can. I arrived here on the morning of March 2nd at 8:30, my night's ride from Eagle Pass in a comfortable Pullman having but one feature to distinguish it from many similar rides I have taken, yet this feature was one so new and remarkable to me, at least, that I must make due record of it, though I can assure you that so long as time shall last for me, it will never be effaced from the record of my memory, so wild and grand was the sight I witnessed. Upon retiring to my berth, shortly after leaving Eagle Pass, I had raised the curtain at my head and had dropped to sleep while vainly trying to count the stars, the while wondering if that thieving custom house official would ever be able to button that fancy vest he had swiped from me. About two o'clock I suddenly awoke with the sensation of a very bright light shining all about me, and sure enough it was a light and as my eyes grew more accustomed to the glare, I soon discovered the cause. It seems that during the night we had entered a valley some ten miles in width and our train was now swiftly moving down its very centre, the mountains on either side towering to an immense height, these mountains are thickly covered to their tops with a thick growth of timber, something like our jack pines, and now in this fearfully dry sp-ill something had set fire to these mountain tops and I was gazing at the grandest and the greatest fire it has ever been my luck to behold, a fire whose length along that great mountain range measured forty miles at least and whose very top extended to the very clouds, and as these mighty flames lit up the whole great valley and the dull brown smoke rolled away toward heaven I felt I was looking upon a spectacle beheld perhaps but once in a lifetime, and as our train gradually receded from the novel sight, I could not help thinking of our Plymouth fire department handled by our brave fire marshals and his trusty lieutenants, and how they would have gloried at being called out to fight a little blaze like this one, and especially if the lower town one cart should happen to get stuck in the mud or be a little late in arriving on the scene of action.

As the train pulled into Monterey, I gathered together my grip and rifle cases and prepared to alight, when the station platform should be reached. To my surprise and disgust I find Mexican station-hops no platforms, and so I alighted instead in about five inches of the dustiest dust I ever struck. Before disembarking from the sleeper I had made enquiries as to the best hotel and had been informed by a fellow traveling ambassador, that Monterey had but two hotels, the Hidalgo and the Hotel Monterey and ended by saying that if I went to the Hidalgo I would wish I had gone to the Monterey, and if I went to the Monterey I would wish I had gone to the Hidalgo. With this proposition staring me in the face I chose the Hidalgo, on account of its similarity to the word fandango, which I knew meant Spanish dancing and music, and a fair run for your money anyhow. Having decided upon my hotel my next thought was to decide upon a proper vehicle in which to make the two mile ride to the hotel, this was not such an easy or such a laughing matter for I was fearfully hungry (this has ever been a malady of mine and this country is aggravating it terribly) and upon my word in all the long line of conveyances drawn up at that station for the accommodation of hungry humanity I could find but one horse that looked to me as if he might with proper care, live to reach the hotel and he was hitched up with a mat that I knew would drop dead ere he could make half the distance, and I tell you my hunger increased and I felt sure, as to the backs, no, carriages, no, I have not the heart to slander American vehicles by using either of these names in describing any of the conveyances drawn up at the depot here that morning, yet I never saw anything on earth anywhere like them I laughed until I had to set down my grips in order to catch my breath. The horses were bad enough but the "saddled" things they were hitched to were a great deal worse. I think they must have been built the same year that Washington crossed the Delaware, perhaps a trifle earlier. They were certainly peach-erries and no mistake. They might have been a cross between a bear and a circus tent with a leaning toward the horse. One thing in their favor they all looked alike, and after my spasm I loaded into one and we started for the hotel. Were I writing a novel I should say that the driver mounted his box, whipped up his handsome span and he rolled swiftly down the broad avenue, but in writing facts and sticking to the truth we were a trifle shy on handsome spans, on swiftness rolling and also on broad avenues, in fact we followed a cow path into the city until nearly noon and while I had not asked for it or paid extra this gave me time to examine the outskirts of the city and a few of its beauties and peculiarities en route to the hotel. I noted first that the city lay at the extreme end of the valley we had been descending during the night and the great mountains rising in front and on either side prevented the railroad going any further and the inhabitants and all visitors had but one means of exit, back up the valley we had just descended. Directly in front of us at the end of the valley was the noted hunk of this section, called Saddle Rock mountain, rising to the height of seven thousand feet and being as correct in shape and imitation of a Mexican saddle as if carved out of that solid rock by the hand of some great giant stonecutter and I am told that the seat of this rock saddle would easily hold a regiment of mounted cavalry, and that the pomel rises from the seat to a height of three hundred feet and I think it is the truth. On the outskirts of the city I found the regulation adobe hut, thatched roof of cane or moss, one doorway without the door, and entirely void of windows. If the Lord has dealt kindly with the tenants they have two pigs in the rear room, three game roosters in the front room and fifteen children everywhere and I noted that to most of them Providence had indeed dealt kindly. The trip to the hotel at last came to an end and we reached the hotel itself and here came another surprise for me I have stayed at the Pie house and at Matthews' hotel in Carleton in days gone by but they were as fine gold studded with precious stones as compared with this Hidalgo, pen cannot describe it, but you can just faintly imagine its juicy lusciousness when I tell you that it was the boast of the proprietor that the building was built and used as a convent long before Fulton invented the steamboat and he had not thought it right to desecrate its sacredness by making any changes or adding any repairs on the building since, and thus she stands and I am of the opinion that he was still using some of the bread and butter, also the cheese of that same period, of course it might have changed some in the keeping, but I could discover no great improvement on that account. I am leaving it all tonight for a ride to Torreón quite filled with old dreams, old cheese, old photographs, old drummer work and best of all, old sweet memories awakened by an order for Daisy Air Rifles. Here comes my puncher, ta ta, will see you in Torreón. Yours truly,

 CHAS. H. BENNETT.

THE UNIVERSE IN MOTION.
 A Wonderful Illusion Produced by the Cinematograph.

One of the most interesting triumphs of the cinematograph has just been accomplished. Flammarion, the French astronomer, has prepared a series of photographs which enable an audience to witness, reproduced on a screen, the movements of the heavenly bodies, and even the revolving earth as it must appear to the man in the moon. With a cinematograph Flammarion took his stand one night in the center of a stretch of land, and left the moving earth to register the heavens. In order to make the consecutive pictures that would enable him to portray the heavenly bodies in motion, he took a large number of proofs—thousands of them—representing the appearance of the heavens at various hours in the day and night, and in this way made a series of photographs showing the gradual going down of the sun, the coming out of the stars, the rising of the moon, its motion during the night, and the entire movements of the ever-changing astronomical bodies from darkness to dawn. The flying stars that shot across the firmament during the night were all faithfully portrayed, and the whole scene of the starlit heavens was transferred to the film, ending with the breaking of day, and the chasing away of the stars by the rising of the sun in the morning. In order to heighten the illusion, the theater is darkened during the exhibition, so that nothing on the stage is visible, and the supporting effect of the stationary walls being absent, the heavenly bodies gyrate with dizzy speed and in defiance of all the accepted rules for their movements. But this is not all. In a sense the pictures he obtained are "fakes," but they are strictly true to fact, and of considerable scientific value. Flammarion obtained a large globe, on which were marked the various seas and countries of the earth in their exact geographical positions. Behind this globe he placed a representation of the firmament as it appears at night, and illuminated the globe with a strong light, made to shine on the globe in the manner that the sun does on the earth. Then the globe was set revolving, and the cinematograph photographed it in two minutes, showing the entire revolution of a world in that space of time. The effect is wonderful. The audience sees the world revolve in a few minutes, exhibiting the great globe, with every sea, river and mountain faithfully portrayed. At the proper time night falls on the world, and the day dawns in due course, when the revolving globe comes back to the light of the sun. Every detail is shown on the screen with wonderful fidelity.—Kansas City Star.

Weak and Diseased Stomachs.
 Is it to be Wondered At?
 Because you have made the stomach a receptacle for almost everything, from the most delicate and refined to the coarsest and most indigestible, and because you have broken down and rebelled under this outrageous course, you try to patch up a drive by dosing it with bill-board remedies, regardless of name or merit, because they are extensively advertised. The result is, that having tried several of these nostrums, with little or no benefit, being deceived by all, you lose faith in medicine, become hopeless, and consider your disease incurable.
 To such we say, make one more grand effort in the purchase of a package of Drake's Dyspepsia Cure and Nerve Restorer; if this fails to convince you of its efficacy to cure any case of stomach and nerve trouble, and if you do not clearly realize a marked change for the better don't buy any more.
