"GOD AND ME"

On the keystone of a bridge over a little stream in a beautiful Scottish parish there are the words, "God and Me." The tale is interesting. A girl in danger of perishing in the stream when it was in flood, vowed that if God would save her life and help her in the future, she would build a bridge over the dangerous chasm. The inscription on the bridge tells the secret of her success.

It is not "God" alone—that would mean human idleness; nor "Me" alone—that would mean human presumption. It is not even "Me and God"—that would mean human pride; but "God and Me" gives the scriptural way of success. "Fellow-workers with God" yet depending on him.

Bishop Henderson in Plymouth, Nov. 20th

The coming of Bishop Theodore S. Henderson, D. D., L. L. D., to Plymouth next Monday will mark it as one of the greatest days in the religious history of the community. It has been many, many years since a bishop of the Methodist church has been in Plymouth, and the privilege of seeing and hearing a real live bishop in a town of this size is a privilege, which ought to be appreciated by hundreds of Plymouth citizens. Bishop Henderson is visiting only two points on this district this season, and Plymouth is one of the two fortunate places to be chosen, through the interposition of the district superintendent, Dr. Ramsdell, of Ann Arbor.

Bishop Henderson will lay the corner stone of the new Methodist church while here, although his coming to Plymouth was not contingent upon the ceremony, he having promised to visit our village before the corner stone laying was planned.

The bishop will make two addresses while in Plymouth, one at 3:45 in the afternoon on "The Church and the Young People," and then again at 7:30 in the evening on a general theme of interest to everyone. The auditorium of the Presbyterian church has been very kindly provided for the afternoon and evening meetings.

The sessions on Monday will be in the nature of a group meeting for the churches of the neighborhood, with several pastors participating. The young people of the high school are especially invited to hear the address of the bishop to young people in the afternoon, and both afternoon and evening sessions are thrown wide open to everyone of any church or no church. There will not be made a money raising occasion, no pledges or money being asked for, but the names of all who have contributed to the building fund of the new church will be placed in the corner stone.

Following is the program to which all are invited:
General Theme, "Community Service."
2:00. Devotional half hour, Rev. Harry Smith, Wayne.
2:30. "The Church and Civic Betterment," Geo. W. Richwine.
2:45. "The Church and the Child," Rev. Wm. Dawe, D. D., Dearborn.
3:00. "The Church and the Community," Rev. F. M. Field.
3:30. "The Community and the Church," Rev. F. I. Walker, Northville.
3:45. "The Church and the Young People," Bishop Theodore S. Henderson.
(High school students especially invited)
4:30. Laying of corner stone of new church by the bishop.
25c supper at the home of F. M. Loomis, 86 Main street.
7:00. Opening exercises, Rev. Joseph Dutton, Howell.
7:30. Address by Bishop Henderson. Informal reception to Bishop Henderson, giving everyone an opportunity to meet him.

A Pioneer of Plymouth Passes Away

The remains of John S. Kellogg, a pioneer of Plymouth and one of its most honored and respected citizens, were brought here last Saturday morning from Cincinnati, Ohio, where he passed away at the home of his daughter, Thursday, November 9th. Mr. Kellogg had resided in Plymouth for many years, until three years ago when he went to make his home with his daughter in the Ohio city. The remains were taken to the home of his brother, Joel R. Kellogg, on west Ann Arbor street, where the funeral services were held at two o'clock the same afternoon, Rev. B. F. Farber officiating. The interment was made in Riverside cemetery. The following sketch of the life of Mr. Kellogg was read at the services:

John Stivers Kellogg was born in Palmyra, N. Y., October 23, 1825. Four years later he came to Michigan with his father and mother, two sisters and seven brothers. They came to the very spot where we are gathered together at this hour. At that time it was but a clearing in the woodland and Indians passed to and fro frequently. Some years later he moved onto the farm on mile west of Plymouth on the Ann Arbor road. In later life he returned to Plymouth. Three years ago he went to Cincinnati to spend his closing days of life's pilgrimage with his daughter in the beautiful suburb of Hyde Park. He delighted in the beauty of this place and lived out his days in contentment and peace. On his last birthday, Oct. 23rd, he received a fall that resulted in a broken hip and from that day he was unable to leave his bed and on Nov. 9 he departed this life in a most peaceful and beautiful manner, aged 91 years and 17 days. During his brief residence in Hyde Park, Mr. Kellogg found his way into the hearts of children by the score and they found him most responsive to their love and esteem. Acquaintance always ripened into friendship and friendship into love. He leaves to mourn their loss, one brother, Joel R. Kellogg, of Plymouth, who is the last of a large family and in his 97th year; two daughters, Mrs. Samuel S. Bowman and Mrs. Chas. F. MacAdow; many other relatives and a host of friends.

A new transformer and switchboard are being installed and the building will be used as a sub-station. When the work is all completed the Edison Co. will be able to give our citizens the best possible service at all times. Their efforts are appreciated by the people of Plymouth.

THE LONE STAR RANGER

A Thrilling Texas Border Story
By ZANE GREY

SYNOPSIS

Black Duane, inheriting blood lust from his father, kills a liquor-maddened "bad man" who is bent on killing Duane. To escape the law, Buck flees to the wild country infested by outlaws. He has just met one and is invited to form a partnership for better or worse. He accepts. They have trouble at once. Stevens dies from a bullet wound. Buck enters the camp of Bland's gang and wounds an outlaw who tries to kill him. He finds a champion in Buck and through him meets Mrs. Bland and Jennie, an orphaned hostage.

Comes the next big crisis in Buck Duane's life. He meets it with characteristic energy and decision. More murder is done, but the cause is good. Love and license and intrigue play their part in the drama. How this hunted man who isn't an outlaw at heart brings out the only decent streak in Euchre and how he rolls another bad man by shielding the helpless is told here.

CHAPTER VII.

That night Duane was not troubled by ghosts haunting his waking and sleeping hours. He awoke feeling bright and eager, and grateful to Euchre for having put something worth while into his mind. During breakfast, however, he was unusually thoughtful, working over the idea of how much or how little he could count on in the outlaw. He was aware of Euchre's scrutiny.

"Wal," began the old man, at last, "now'd you make out with Jennie? What'd you an' she talk about?"

"We had a little chat. You know you wanted me to cheer her up."

Euchre sat with coffee-cup poised and narrow eyes studying Duane.

"Buck, I've seen some outlaws whose word was good. Mine is. You can trust me. I trusted you, takin' you over there an' puttin' you wise to my tryin' to help that poor kid."

Then enjoined by Euchre, Duane began to tell the conversations with Jennie and Mrs. Bland word for word. Long before he had reached an end Euchre set down the coffee-cup and began to stare, and at the conclusion of the story his face lost some of its red color and beads of sweat stood out thickly on his brow.

"Wal, if it doesn't floor me!" he ejaculated, blinking at Duane. "Young man, I figured you was some swift, an' sure to make your mark on this river; but I reckon I missed your real caliber. Do you know what it'll take to do all you promised Jen'?"

"I haven't any idea," replied Duane, bravely.

"You'll have to pull the wool over Kate Bland's eyes, even if she falls in love with you, which 's shore likely, then won't be easy. An' she'll kill you for a minute, Buck, if she ever got wise. You ain't mistaken her none, are you?"

"Not me, Euchre. She's a woman. I'd fear her more than any man."

"Wal, you'll have to kill Bland an' Chess Alloway an' Rugg, an' mebbe some others, before you can ride off into the hills with that girl."

"All right, I'll meet what comes, an' you can't do it alone."

"I'll have to. I wouldn't ask you to help me."

"Wal, I'll take my chances," replied Euchre, gruffly. "I'm going to help Jennie, you can gamble your last penny on that."

They talked and planned, though in truth it was Euchre who planned. Duane who listened and agreed. While awaiting the return of Bland and his lieutenants it would be well for Duane to grow friendly with the other outlaws, to sit in a few games of monte, or show a willingness to spend a little money. The two schemers were to call upon Mrs. Bland every day—Euchre to carry messages of cheer and warning to Jennie, Duane to blind the elder woman at any cost. These preliminaries decided upon, they proceeded to put them into action.

Duane's only chance to help keep her mind from constant worry, to gather the import of every word which had a double meaning. And all through those waiting days he knew that Jennie's face, and especially the warm, fleeting glance she gave him, was responsible for a subtle and gradual change in him. This change, he fancied, was only that, through remembrance of her he got rid of his pale, sickening ghosts.

One day a careless Mexican threw a lighted cigarette up into the brush matting that served as a ceiling for Benson's den, and there was a fire which left little more than the adobe walls standing. The result was that while repairs were being made there was no gambling and drinking. Time hung very heavily on the hands of some two-score outlaws. Duane, however, found the hours anything but empty. He spent more time at Mrs. Bland's; he walked miles on all the trails leading out of the valley; he had a care for the conditions of his two horses.

Upon his return from the latest of these tramps Euchre suggested that they go down to the river to the boat-landing.

Nearly all the outlaws in camp were assembled on the river-bank, lolling in the shade of the cottonwoods. The heat was oppressive.

Duane and Euchre joined the lazy group and sat down with them. Euchre lighted a black pipe, and drawing his hat over his eyes, lay back in comfort after the manner of the majority of the outlaws. But Duane was alert, observing, thoughtful. He never missed anything. It was his belief that any moment an idle word might be of benefit to him. Moreover, these rough men were always interesting.

"Bland's been chased across the river," said one.

"Now, he's delverin' cattle to that Cuban ship," replied another.

"Big deal on, hey?"

"Some big. Rugg says the boss hed an order fer fifteen thousand."

"Say, that order 'll take a year to fill."

"Now, Hardin is in cahoots with Bland. Between 'em they'll fill orders bigger 'n that."

"Wondered what Hardin was rustin' in here fer."

Duane could not possibly attend to all the conversation among the outlaws. He endeavored to get the drift of talk nearest to him.

"Kid Fuller's goin' to cash," said a sandy-whiskered little outlaw.

"So Jim was telling me. Blood-poison, ain't it? That hole wasn't bad. But he took the fever," rejoined a comrade.

"Deger says the Kid might pull through if he had nursin'."

"Wal, Kate Bland ain't nursin' any shot-up boys these days. She hasn't got time."

A laugh followed this sally; then came a penetrating silence. Some of the outlaws glanced good-naturedly at Duane. They bore him no ill will. Manifestly they were aware of Mrs. Bland's infatuation.

"Boys, poke all the fun you like at me, but don't mention any lady's name again. My hand is nervous and itchy these days."

He smiled as he spoke, and his speech was drawled; but the good humor in no wise weakened it. Then his latter remark was significant to a class of men who from inclination and necessity practiced at gun-drawing until they wore callous and sore places on their thumbs and incuticated in the very depths of their nervous organization a habit that made even the simplest and most innocent motion of the hand end at or near the hip. There was something remarkable about a gun-fighter's hand. It never seemed to be gloved, never to be injured, never out of sight or in an awkward position. Grizzled outlaws in that group, some of whom had many notches on their gun-handles, accorded Duane silence that carried conviction of the regard in which he was held.

"Oral hot, ain't it?" remarked Bill Black presently. Bill could not keep quiet for long. He was a typical Texas desperado, had never been anything else. He was stoop-shouldered and bow-legged from much riding; a wiry little man, all muscle, with a square head, a hard face partly black from scrubby beard and red from sun, and a bright, roving, cruel eye. His shirt was open at the neck, showing a grizzled breast.

"Lustest cuss I ever ranted out," went on Bill, discontentedly. "Nash's to do! Say, if anybody wants to swim maybe some of you'll gamble?"

He produced a dirty pack of cards and waved them at the motionless crowd.

"Bill, you're too good at cards," replied a lanky outlaw.

"Now, Jasper, you say that power-ful sweet, an' you look sweet, or I might take it to hear," replied Black, with a sudden change of tone.

Here it was again—that appalling passion. What Jasper saw fit to reply would mollify the outlaw or it would not. There was an even balance.

"No offense, Bill," said Jasper, placidly, without moving.

Bill grunted and forgot Jasper. But he seemed restless and dissatisfied.

Duane writhing the disgruntled outlaw, marveled at him and wondered what was in his mind. These men were more variable than children, as unstable as water, as dangerous as dynamite.

"Bill, I'll bet you ten you can't spill whatever's in the bucket that peon's packin'," said the outlaw called Jim. Black's head came up with the action of a hawk about to swoop.

Duane glanced from Black to the road, where he saw a crippled peon carrying a tin bucket toward the river. This peon was a half-witted Indian who lived in a shack and did odd jobs for the Mexicans. Duane had met him often.

"Jim, I'll take you up," replied Black.

Something, perhaps a harshness in his voice, caused Duane to whirl. He caught a leaping gleam in the outlaw's eye.

"Aw, Bill, that's too far a shot," said Jasper, as Black rested an elbow on his knee and sighted over the loop, heavy Colt. The distance to the peon was about fifty paces, too far for even the most expert shot to hit a moving object so small as a bucket.

Duane, marvelously keen in the alignment of sights, was positive that Black held too high. Another look at the hard face, now tense and dark with blood, confirmed Duane's suspicion that the outlaw was not aiming at the bucket at all. Duane leaped and struck the level gun out of his hand. Another outlaw picked it up.

Black cursed low and deep under his breath. The older man made a violent action of some kind and apparently was quieted by a restraining hand.

Then he led the way to the porch, his spurs clinking, the weapons he was carrying rattling, and he flopped down on a bench.

"How are you, boss?" asked Euchre. "Hello, old man. I'm well, but all in."

Alloway, slowly walked on to the porch and leaned against the rail. He answered Euchre's greeting with a nod. Then he stood there, a dark, silent figure.

Mrs. Bland's full voice in eager questioning had a tendency to ease the situation. Bland replied briefly to her, reporting a remarkably successful trip.

Duane thought it was time to show himself. He had a feeling that Bland and Alloway would let him go for the moment. They were plainly non-plused, and Alloway seemed sullen, brooding.

"Jennie," whispered Duane, "that was clever of Mrs. Bland. We'll keep up the deception. Any day now be ready!"

She pressed close to him, and a barely audible "Hurry!" came breathing into his ear.

"Good night, Jennie," he said, aloud. "Hope you feel better to-morrow."

Then he stepped out into the moonlight and spoke. Bland returned the greeting, and, though he was not amiable, he did not show resentment.

"Met Jasper as I rode in," said Bland presently. "He told me you made Bill Black mad, and there's a liable to be a fight. What did you go off the handle about?"

Duane explained the incident. "I'm sorry I happened to be there," he went on. "It wasn't my business."

"Scurry trick that'd been," muttered Bland. "You did right. All the same, Duane, I want you to stop quarrelling with my men. If you were one of us—that'd be different. I can't keep my men from fighting. But I'm not called on to let an outsider hang around my camp and plug my rustlers."

"I guess I'll have to be biting the trail for somewhere," said Duane.

"Why not join my band? You've got a bad start already, Duane, and if I know this border you'll never be a respectable citizen again. You're a born killer."

"But I'm no gun-fighter," protested Duane. "Circumstances made me—"

"No doubt," interrupted Bland, with a laugh. "Circumstances made me a rustler. You don't know yourself. You're young; you've got a temper; your father was one of the most dangerous men Texas ever had. I don't see any other career for you. Instead of going it alone—a lone wolf, as the Texans say—why not make friends with other outlaws? You'll live longer."

Euchre squirmed in his seat.

"Boss, I've been givin' the boy exactly that same line of talk. An' he'd be a grand feller fer the gang. I've seen Wild Bill Hickok throw a gun, an' Billy the Kid, an' Hardin, an' Chess here—all the fastest men on the border. An' with apologies to present company, I'm here to say Duane has them all skinned. His draw is different. You can't see how he does it."

Euchre's admiring praise served to create an effective little silence. Alloway shifted uneasily on his feet, his spurs jangling faintly, and did not lift his head. Bland seemed thoughtful.

"That's about the only qualification I have to make me eligible for your band," said Duane, easily.

"It's good enough," replied Bland, shortly. "Will you consider the idea?"

"I'll think it over. Good night."

He left the group, followed by Euchre. When they reached the end of the lane, and before they had exchanged a word, Bland called Euchre back. Duane proceeded slowly along the moonlit road to the cabin and sat down under the cottonwoods to wait for Euchre. As he sat there with a foreboding of more and darker work ahead of him there was yet a strange sweetness left to him, and it lay in thought of Jennie. The pressure of her cold little hands lingered in his mind. He did not think of her as a woman, and he did not analyze his feelings. He just had vague, dreamy thoughts and imaginations that were inter-spersed in the constant and stern revolving of plans to save her.

A shuffling step roused him. Euchre's dark figure came crossing the moonlight grass under the cottonwoods. The moment the outlaw reached him Duane saw that he was laboring under great excitement. It scarcely affected Duane. He seemed to be acquiring patience, calmness, strength.

"Bland kept you pretty long," he said.

"Wait till I get my breath," replied Euchre. He sat silent a little while, fanning himself with a sombrero, though the night was cool, and then he went into the cabin to return presently with a lighted pipe.

"Fine night," he said; and his tone further acquainted Duane with Euchre's quaint humor. "Fine night for love-affairs, by gum!"

"I'd noticed that," rejoined Duane, dryly.

"Buck, listen to this here yarn. When I got back to the porch I seen Bland. Asked me some questions right from the shoulder. I was ready for them, an' I swore the moon was green cheese. He was satisfied. Bland always trusted me, an' I liked me, too, I reckon. I hated to lie black that way. But he's a hard man with bad intentions toward Jennie, an' I'd double-cross him any day."

"Then he went into the house. Jennie had gone to her little room, an' Bland called her to come out. Then, Buck, his next move was some surprisin'. He deliberately threw a gun on Kate. Yes str, he pointed his big blue Colt right at her, an' he says: 'I've a mind to blow out your brains.'"

"Go ahead," says Kate, cool as could be.

"You lied to me," he roars.

"Kate laughed in his face. Bland slammed the gun down an' made a grab fer her. He choked her till I thought she was strangled. Alloway made him stop. She flopped down on the bed an' gasped for a while.

"Then he went in an' dragged poor Jen out. An' when I seen Bland twist her—hurt her—I had a queer hot feelin' deep down in me, an' fer the only time in my life I wished I was a gun-fighter."

"Wal, Jen was whiter 'n a sheet, an' her eyes were big and stary, but she had nerve. First time I ever seen her show any."

"Jennie," he said, "my wife said Duane came here to see you. I believe she's lyin'. I think she's been carryin' on with him, an' I want to know. If she's been an' you tell me the truth I'll let you go. I'll send you to Huntsville, where you can communicate with your friends. I'll give you money."

"That must hev been a hell of a minute fer Kate Bland. If ever I seen death in a man's eye I seen it in Bland's. He loves her. That's the strange part of it."

"Has Duane been comin' here to see my wife?" Bland asked, fiercely.

"No," said Jennie.

"He has fallen in love with you? Kate said that."

"I—I'm not—I don't know—he hasn't told me."

"But you're in love with him?"

"Yes," she said; an' Buck, if you only could have seen her! She showed up her head, an' her eyes were full of fire. Bland seemed dazed at sight of her. An' Alloway, why, that little skunk of an outlaw cried right out. He was hit plumb center. He's in love with Jen. An' the look of her then was enough to make any feller quiver. He just stunk out of the room. I told you, mebbe, that he'd been tryin' to git Bland to marry Jen to him. So even a tough like Alloway can love a woman!"

"Bland stamped up an' down the room. He sure was dyin' hard."

"Jennie," he said, once more turnin' to her. "You swear in fear of your life that you're tellin' truth. Kate's not in love with Duane! She's let him come to see you? There's been nothin' between them?"

"No, I swear," answered Jennie; an' Bland sat down like a man killed.

"Go to bed, you white-faced—"

Bland choked on some word or other—a bad one, I reckon—an' he positively shook in his chair.

"Jennie went then, an' Kate began to have hysterics. An' your Uncle Euchre ducked his nut out of the door an' come home."

CHAPTER IX.

Both men were awake early, silent with the premonition of trouble ahead, thoughtful of the fact that the time for the long-planned action was at hand.

"Buck, the sooner the better now," Euchre finally declared, with a glint in his eye. "The more time we use up now the less surprised Bland 'll be."

"I'm ready when you are," replied Duane, quietly, and he rose from the table.

"Wal, saddle up, then," went on Euchre, gruffly. "On to them two packs I made, one fer each saddle. You can't tell—mebbe either boss will be carryin' double. It's good they're both big, strong horses. Guess that wasn't a wise move of your Uncle Euchre's—bringin' in your horses an' havin' them ready?"

THE REPEATER PAR EXCELLENCE

WHY SHE CAN OUTTALK YOU

Scientist Comes Forward With Assertion That Women Need Less Lung Power Than Men.

A woman can talk longer than a man because she uses less force in speaking than the man does. A German professor has proved by actual and very delicate measurements that the barytone singer uses far more energy than the tenor and that the bass singer uses more force than either.

The range of voices differs greatly, so the percentage varies to the same extent, but as a general result it was proved that the tenor uses only from one-seventh to one-sixteenth of the lung power of the barytone or bass. The difference between the force used by the contralto and the soprano is also marked, and the contralto who sings in very deep tones uses at least ten times the force of the thrilling soprano.

The explanation is so simple that it is surprising that the investigation was not made long ago. It has long been known that the tenor or soprano brings the vocal cords close together and keeps the edges only vibrating by the emission of air. The bass or contralto leaves the space between the cords wider open and has to vibrate very much more of the membranes, so that a considerably larger amount of air is required and much more force is expended.

Persons with high, squeaky voices often seem to be very loudmouthed, and the reason is very plain—they can talk with far less effort than those who take a deeper tone and have to use more air to utter their words.

Here lies the real explanation of the ease with which a woman can outtalk a man. She has the advantage of using from one-seventh to one-sixteenth less lung power and even though her lungs may be smaller the difference is never so great as that between the amounts of air required.

How It Is Done. A man, engaged in buying a necktie for himself, turned the pile over and over and at last put aside two as not worthy of further consideration. The salesman placed the rejected ties in a separate box. The man asked whether they had been placed by mistake or those he had been examining.

"Oh, no," was the polite response; "but we have orders when five or six men turn down a tie to take it out and put it aside."

"What becomes of them?"

"We sell them to women who come here to buy ties for men."

Corresponding Misfortunes. "George, the coal is all out."

"Sorry, my dear, but I'm all in." Baltimore American.

We read of the seven ages of man, but one age is ample for the average woman.

"There's a Reason"

WILSON CHOSEN ON FACE OF RETURNS-RECOUNT IS ASKED

Vote in Western States Made Victory of the President Possible.

REPUBLICANS ASK RECOUNT

No Charge of Fraud Is Made, but the Possibility of Error in Count Is Seen.

Race in Several States So Close That Result Was Not Known Until Practically Every Ballot Had Been Counted.

New York, Nov. 11.—President Wilson and Vice President Marshall have been re-elected on the face of the unofficial returns, but with a result in several pivotal states that is so close that the Republican leaders say they will not be satisfied until a recount of the votes has been made in these states.

The situation is extraordinary and has resulted in days of nerve-racking strain for the people of the world. If the election officials of a few remote precincts in a few states know how the nation has been waiting breathless to hear from them, they must be swelled up enormously with a sense of their importance. For on those few precincts has depended the nation's choice of its chief executive.

That Mr. Wilson's victory over Mr. Hughes will not be conceded without a recount in the close states, such as California, New Hampshire, New Mexico and North Dakota, was determined at conferences of the Republican leaders here. Chairman Wilcox asserted a recount would be demanded wherever the margin of Democratic victory was so small that comparatively few votes would turn the scales. He and his associates say they take the position that there should be no cloud upon Mr. Wilson's title to the presidency.

The Democrats, for their part, declared that there must be a recount in New Hampshire, even though the returns gave the state to Mr. Wilson.

That the returns are still incomplete is due to the presence on the border of the National Guard of a number of states. The soldiers are permitted to vote by mail, their ballots being forwarded to the auditors of their home counties, and in Minnesota especially the vote of the Guardsmen is likely to cut a figure in determining whether the state goes into the Wilson or the Hughes column.

Minnesota was as had California in the matter of shifts, and as its delegation is nearly as large, it, too, was watched with the intensest interest. Through days and nights of counting, the race was a see-saw, with but a thousand or so of votes separating the candidates. Neither side would admit defeat, and even now both are awaiting the soldier vote and the official count.

New Hampshire a Surprise. Perhaps the most surprising of all the states was New Hampshire. It alone of all New England failed to give the Republican candidate a substantial plurality, and for days no one knew in which column it would land. The astonishing closeness of the vote was shown by the rival claims, three days after the election, of 100 plurality for Hughes and 94 for Wilson. In the circumstances it is no wonder that the managers of both parties should demand a recount.

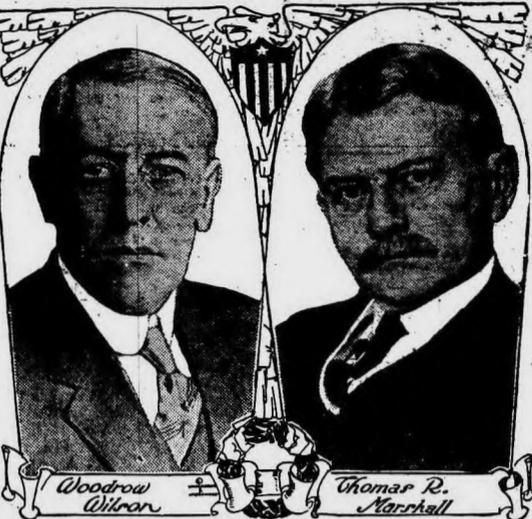

New Mexico, with three electoral votes, attracted national attention by placing itself early in the list of doubtful states, and as it soon appeared that almost every electoral vote would be vital, the returns from down on the border were grabbed hot off the wires. After veering back and forth for days, New Mexico was definitely placed in the Wilson column, though there, too, the president's margin was so scant that a basis was afforded for the call for a recount. A few mistakes discovered in the figures of the precinct officials might well swing the state over to Hughes.

Wilcox Demands Recount. On Friday National Chairman Wilcox of the Republican party handed out the following statement: "The result still depends upon the vote in a few close states. It must be borne in mind that the returns thus far announced are, in most states, unofficial, and may be changed by the official count required by the laws of those states."

Does an Eve of Election. Grand Island, Neb., Nov. 10.—Silas R. Barton, a member of the Sixty-third congress, representing the Fifth Nebraska district, and the Republican candidate for election to the same office at this time, in competition with Congressman Ashton C. Shallenberger, died suddenly at 11:30 o'clock Wednesday morning of acute pneumonia. The exposure the night preceding the election, he having stood with bare head while addressing his home folks, is believed to have brought on the fatal attack.

Sponge Farm. There has been established on the shores of an island off the west coast of Florida what is believed to be the first sponge farm in existence. It is estimated that more than 500,000 sponges are thus being cultivated.

Still Valuable, Anyway. Alligators are among the vanishing species of animals, but they can always feel a sense of pride in being useful to the world while they were here in the shape of alligator bags.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Result in Minnesota, with 12 votes, will not be known until soldiers' vote is counted. It is possible that recount in close states may change the total to some extent.

The liquor people to secure the adoption of proposals which would nullify their prohibitory laws.

Thus 24 states out of 48—one-half of the states of the Union—have now declared for state-wide prohibition, and over 60 per cent.

Farm Vote the Factor. There are several great outstanding facts concerning the result of the election, one of which is that labor, in all the big industrial states except Ohio, declined to give its undivided support to President Wilson despite his claim to it on the score of having persuaded congress to pass the Adamson "eight-hour" bill.

Another interesting development was the independence of the West, which is asserting that it elected a president without the aid of New York and Pennsylvania and other big western and central states. When it was found, early in the evening of election day, that the empire state had gone for Hughes, the newspapers of the metropolises, even those that had supported Wilson, conceded the victory to the Republicans, without waiting to hear from the middle West. When the returns came in from these regions, it was found that the farmer and stock raiser had decided the election.

Yet another fact that calls for comment is that Governor Johnson of California, running on the Republican and Progressive tickets, has been elected to the United States senate by something like 300,000 plurality, and yet the state went Democratic on the presidency.

Presidential Succession Unbroken. Washington, Nov. 10.—Although inauguration day, March 4 next, falls on Sunday there will be no break in the presidential succession, according to statements made by officials of the state department.

In 1877 President Hayes took the oath of office on March 3 and his term began on March 4 at noon. This procedure might be followed next year. President Monroe in 1821 took the oath of office on March 5, and President Taylor followed his example in the year 1849.

Drinking of Water

(By V. M. PIERCE, M. D.)

The general conclusion of the latest Medical Scientists proves that drinking plenty of pure water both between meals and with one's meals is beneficial to health. It has now been proven by means of the X-rays and actual tests upon many healthy young men that the drinking of large amounts of water with meals is often beneficial. Therefore if you want to keep healthy drink plenty of pure water (not ice water), both with your meals and between meals. If you ever suffer from headache, lumbago, rheumatism, or any of the symptoms of kidney trouble—such as deep colored urine, sediment in urine, getting out of bed at night frequently and other troublesome effects, take a little Anuric before meals. These Anuric Tablets can be obtained at almost any drug store.

Why Labor Is Scarce. Here is one reason why you may have overlooked why labor is growing scarcer every day in the United States: We have now in Pennsylvania alone 225,000 automobiles. One-third of them are pleasure cars driven by chauffeurs, an army of 75,000 able-bodied men removed entirely from productive work.

The army of pleasure car chauffeurs in the whole country must exceed half a million men—auto producers. Indeed, there is, another great big army of men building pleasure cars to be operated by these other non-producers of essentials.

They used to compete in Germany that every taxpayer had to carry a soldier on his back. We vary it in the United States by carrying a chauffeur on our backs, says "Girard" in the Philadelphia Ledger.

Knows Her Own Wants. "Mother, may I have some more pie?" said Lucy. "No dear, you have had one piece, and that is enough." "Now, mother, you think you know all about my stomach, and you don't at all, for it wants another piece of pie."

TOO KEEN ON THEIR SPORT

Anglers Would Have Done Better to Have Read the Other Side of the Notice Board.

The disciples of Izank Walton had found a perfect stream for the exercise of their art, and they settled themselves for a day's fishing, uninterfered by a notice board. The board, which had been painted by an amateur, read "Notices—These grounds is private, and yer can't fish 'ere. These fish ain't the kind to be tempted by worms, and there—"

Here space ran out, and the injunction was left uncompleted. For two hours the anglers sat by the stream, tempting the trout, not with worms, but with the very latest and most expensive bait.

But nothing happened. Then suddenly appeared the owner of the grounds and the author of the notice board.

"Hi, you two! 'Ave yer read that board?"

"Well, yes, we did. But—er—we thought you wouldn't mind, and we couldn't find your house, or we would have—"

"Oh, it don't matter! I only thought, 'seem' yer ain't fish' there, that you 'adn't read both sides of the board. If you 'ave, of course, go on amusing yourselves!"

A hasty glance at the other side of the board showed that it contained the exhortation begun on the front, as follows: "—an't no fish."—London Answers.

Charged With Felonious Assault

Deputy Sheriff Springer arrested Albert Keach, whose home is in Ionia, at Northville, Monday morning, where he was employed on the new school building, on a warrant charging him with a felonious assault upon a young girl. Keach was brought before Justice Campbell Monday morning and in default of bail was remanded to the county jail to await examination here next Wednesday.

It seems that Keach, who it is alleged had been drinking, went into the D. U. D. station last Sunday evening and spoke improperly to Margaret Frederick, a fifteen-year-old girl, who was waiting for a car to take her to her home in Northville. The child became frightened at the man's words and actions, and ran from the station and down the street with Keach following her. She fell on the walk in front of the old Wherry home, where the man overtook her, but she managed to get away and ran into the home of Wm. Wilson on Dodge street. Mr. Wilson went out and saw the man going down the street and upon overtaking him demanded an explanation of his actions, whereupon Keach, it is said, struck at him and a lively scrimmage followed, in which Mr. Wilson soon had his man beating a hasty retreat down the street, where he boarded a car for Northville. Keach is a married man and has a family. His friends say that he is not a man who is in the habit of drinking to excess. The young girl was not injured but was greatly frightened by her experience.

Don't forget that Christmas days are again drawing near. Don't forget that merchants in this town have the goods that you want to buy for those Christmas days. Don't forget that every dollar you spend with a local merchant remains in local circulation and enriches the community just that much. Don't forget that every dollar you spend outside of this town remains outside and decreases the money in local circulation just that much. Don't forget that an advertisement in a local merchant in this paper is an indication that the merchant is prepared to "make good" or he would not resort to publicity in soliciting your trade. Don't forget the good advertiser is generally a "live wire," and that live wires are better than dead ones.

A Fine Bulletin Board

One of the finest equipments for publicity ever seen in Plymouth is the changeable letter bulletin board received by Rev. Frank M. Field this week for the use of the local Methodist church. The fixture is put out by the Multifarm Sales Co. of Chicago, at a cost of $35 and is furnished for the use of the local church with the compliments of the pastor.

The sign board is four feet high and three feet wide and consists of a wooden cabinet with metal back and glass front. Four different sizes of letters are provided, ranging from 1 1/2 to 5 inches, the largest letters being furnished in both white and red on a black background. The bulletin fixture will be used in front of the village hall, where the Methodist services are now held, and on it will be announced all the activities of the church. Later it will be set up in front of the new church. Mr. Field has been a user of one of these sign boards for the past two years, and an article written by him concerning its varied uses has been duplicated by the manufacturers in thousand lots and sent to ministers all over the country.

An Old Man's Stomach

As we grow older and less active, less and less food is required to meet the demands of our bodies. If too much is habitually taken, the stomach will rebel. When a man reaches the advanced age of 35 or 50, you will find that he is a light eater. Be as careful as you will, however, you will occasionally eat more than you should and feel the need of Chamberlain's Tablets to correct the disorder. These tablets do not contain opium, but strengthen the stomach and enable it to perform its functions naturally. They also cause a gentle movement of the bowels.

Historic Crimes and Mysteries

By Walt Mason

THE STORY OF EUGENE ARAM.

CERTAIN romantic features of the crime and trial of Eugene Aram appealed to Thomas Hood and Bulwer Lytton, so the one wrote a poem and the other a book, about the murderer, with the result that the name of a rather commonplace manslayer remains a household word, and is considered something to conjure with by lawyers and orators. So much sympathy for Eugene was created by Hood's poem that determined efforts have been made, at various times, and by various writers, to prove that he was a martyr, but the evidence against him was too conclusive to be argued away. One little matter has always been overlooked by his defenders. On the morning of the day that saw his execution, he admitted that he deserved his punishment, and attempted to commit suicide with a razor.

One balmy day in 1759 some intelligent British workmen were engaged in digging out stone in a quarry near Knarborough, when they came upon a human skeleton. The bones were reverently collected and taken to town and the villagers engaged in a guessing contest as to whose they might be; then one of the oldest inhabitants remembered that a man named Daniel Clark had mysteriously disappeared some fifteen years before. Daniel had a rather rancid reputation, and had caused the local constables some annoyance, so it was taken for granted, when he dropped out, that he had sought a change of climate. However, now that the bones were found, everybody felt quite sure that he must have been murdered. Then another of the oldest inhabitants recollected that Clark used to be quite intimate with a man named Houseman, and somebody else was sure that when Clark was last seen he was in Houseman's company. Mr. Houseman, who also had a somewhat ragged reputation, still infested the community, so he was rounded up by the centurions and asked to explain the disappearance of his old-time running mate. At first he professed to be greatly shocked that anybody would think him guilty of contributing to Daniel's disappearance. His righteous indignation was worth getting miles to see. But when he had spent a few days in the village to get his conscience got in its work, he made a confession. The bones which had been dug up were not those of Daniel Clark. He didn't know whose they were. Daniel was buried in an entirely different place, and he guided the officers to the proper spot. They went to work with spades and dug up the bones of the late Mr. Clark. That he had been murdered was obvious. Some of his bones were fractured and his skull had been caved in.

In the excitement and enthusiasm over this discovery the original bones were forgotten, and the mystery they represented never was cleared up. They also implicated a murder, but the men must give up its dead before the identity of the victim will be established.

Then Mr. Houseman made an elaborate explanation of the whole business. He and Clark and Eugene Aram had been associated for some time in a general scheme of swindling. Aram, who was educated and clever, directed operations, and Clark and Houseman did the coarse work. Aram wasn't exactly popular with his associates. He was engineering and treated them contemptuously. He spent his evenings in his cottage, reading and studying while they were out rustling, and then they had to call upon him and bring the spoil. Naturally, they felt that their faces were being ground by the iron heel of tyranny.

gene to declare a dividend, he complained that the cottage was close and stuffy, and invited them to take a walk with him. Aram and Clark went on ahead, into a field. Presently Houseman heard them quarreling, and then heard the sickening thud of a club striking human flesh. He ran to the scene of the disturbance and found Clark lying dead. Houseman was badly rattled and ran away. The next day he visited Aram's cottage, and Eugene threatened him with all kinds of catastrophes if he spoke of what he had seen. Knowing that Eugene was dangerous, Mr. Houseman preserved a masterly silence, and the murderer moved away from the neighborhood. The village sleuths got busy and traced him to King's Lynn, where he was quietly employed as an usher in a school, and from that school he was led forth "with gyes upon his wrists."

He made a strenuous defense when placed upon trial. There is no record that he ever deeded committing the crime, but he tried to prove his innocence by technical stratagem. The weak point of the prosecution was that the only direct evidence against him was the testimony of Houseman, and it was generally agreed that Houseman couldn't tell the truth without undergoing a severe strain. Aram's first contention was that the bones were those of a woman, but the medical practitioners soon disposed of that. There were many witnesses who testified to the good character of the prisoner, and Aram cried out passionately that his days were honestly laborious, his nights intensely studious. Then his lawyers tried to show that the condition of the bones didn't necessarily indicate murder. The bones of this skeleton were fractured, but so were those of the Archbishop of York when exhumed in 1723, and he certainly was not murdered. Every trick known to the lawyers of that period was resorted to, but all in vain. The jury found him guilty, and Aram was returned to his cell to await the executioner.

This is the history of a crime which was sordid in itself, a crime committed by a man who had no other claim to distinction than that of the common. Yet, after a century and a half, crime and criminal still live in song and story because they happened to engage the attention of two great geniuses of the pen.

TRAINED FLEA FOREVER LOST

Col. Harta Beetem Relates Sad Story Concerning Fate of His Truly Wonderful Pet.

"I've heard a lot about trained fleas," observed Col. Harta Beetem meditatively, "but I've yet to see the trained flea that could hold a candle to my Rudolph."

Several members of the Necks to Nature club rose casually as though remembering engagements elsewhere and, just as casually the colonel got to the door ahead of them, locked it, and slipped the key in his pocket. "Yes, gentlemen," he continued, "Rudolph is the world's champion trained flea. He could count up to a hundred by wiggling his legs, though after one hundred his legs got too tired. He could also turn handspikes, do a perfect sailor's horpikie, chin himself eight times and do all sorts of stunts on his little parallel bars. I only wish I had him to show you gentlemen now."

"Run away from you, did he, colonel?" asked "Trombly Spiffs sarcastically. "I wouldn't call it that," replied the colonel with his sweet smile. "It came about like this. I was showing him to an old North American Indian—Chief Dirty-Neck by name, reputed to be one hundred and six years old. Well, most unexpectedly, while turning a backward somersault, Rudolph lost his balance and tumbled right down the old Indian's neck. Dirty-Neck fished for him, grunted, said 'Here, Rudolph, colonel,' and put him in my hand. But when I ordered the little fellow six times to do a hand stand and he never moved, I realized that it wasn't Rudolph at all. By that time Dirty-Neck had moved off and Rudolph was lost to me forever."

And the colonel unlocked the door with his sweet smile and returned to his toddy.

Interrupted Problem. A correspondent whose veracity in small matters has hitherto remained unquestioned, writes the following from one of the mushroom camps of the desert: "The other night Chuckawalla Pete's thirst emporium caught fire. The point was a mass of flames when the camp volunteer fire department arrived. Prompt measures were necessary to avoid a total loss, but the mine bookkeeper held up the extinguishment of the blaze. He set out to figure which was the cheapest—to let the shack, consisting of lumber costing $150 a thousand, burn down, or put it out with water hauled 15 miles and costing $8 a barrel. While he was figuring, the shack burned down and we never did hear which way the figures pointed."—Engineering and Mining Journal.

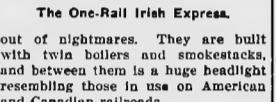

HAS BUT ONE RAIL

IRISH LINE IS SOMETHING OF A CURIOSITY.

Only Ten Miles in Length, but System Employed Makes It Unique—"Atmospheric Railroad" is Another Freak Idea.

The most curious railroad in existence today is, without a doubt, the Lis-towel & Ballybunton railroad, in the west of Ireland. This little line, whose length is only ten miles, is quaint alike in its name and in the system employed. Although an Irish railroad, the system is the invention of a French engineer, and is known as the "Lartigue single rail elevated railroad." The "single rail," it should be added, does not mean a single track railroad. It actually has only one rail for engine and train to run on.

The rail is supported on iron trestles at a height of three feet three inches from the ground, and the locomotive and train are actually balanced on it. The carriages hang down on each side of the line, and passengers in them sitting back to back.

The One-Rail Irish Express.

All this is sufficiently curious, but the locomotives of this extraordinary line are the most eccentric looking of objects ever seen in waking hours or out of nightmares. They are built with twin boilers and smokestacks, and between them is a huge headlight resembling those in use on American and Canadian railroads.

There has always been some question as to how our English standard railroad gauge came into existence at the measurement of four feet eight and one-half inches. The generally-received opinion is that this was the gauge in use at the collieries when George Stephenson first conceived the idea of the locomotive engine.

A very curious train line survival on Dartmoor takes us back to the days before steam railroads. This is the granite tramway originally laid down for the purpose of conveying the granite hewn out near Hey Tor for the rebuilding of London bridge. Long, grooved lengths of granite were placed along the hillside, and on these the stone was conveyed down to the Sover canal at Telgarrey, and thence floated by barge to Teignmouth. Arrived there, it was transferred to sailing ships for London.

Not very much of this primitive granite railroad remains at Hey Tor among the heather and the bracken, for the farmers, being frugal persons, have removed most of the lengths to serve as rubbing posts for their cattle.

An Air Pressure Line. Along the main line of the Great Western railroad in South Devon there are some curious survivals of systems once the pets of celebrated engineers, and as such tried and found unsatisfactory.

Thus, when you come to Starcross, where the line runs so picturesquely along the salt water estuary of the Exe, a tall red sandstone tower will be noticed, adjoining the station. It is quite an ornament in the distant view, and gives rather an Italian air to the surroundings.

This and another building at Totnes are the only surviving evidences of a system invented by Brunel. This was the "atmospheric railroad," by which trains were to be drawn along by air pressure in pipes laid down alongside the line.

The "South Devon railroad," as it was then, was built by him with the idea of doing without locomotive engines. The only engines to be employed were to be those in these engine houses creating air pressure. The method was tried at great cost, and after almost ruinous expense had to be abandoned.

Meanwhile, the buildings—let off for various purposes—serve as reminders of a curious incident in railroad history.—London Answers.

Railroad Capitalization. The total railway operating revenues for the year amounted to $2,956,000,000, with operating expenses of $2,088,000,000.

The railway capital of the United States actually outstanding on June 30, 1915, ($19,719,000,000), was equal to all the nations of the earth, computed prior to the outbreak of the European war. It is a sum representing more than 10 per cent of the total wealth of the country, and equal to the wealth of Belgium, Spain and the Netherlands combined.

Operating Expenses Heavy. It costs $133.28 a minute to operate the Northern Pacific railroad. These figures were given out by the railroad. The cost of operating the road's 6,000 miles of track is $148,780 daily, but this does not include the $12,597 daily spent for permanent improvements. Annually the road spends $7,225,906 for betterments.

ALL ORDERED TO SALUTE

Female Employees on German Lines Have Been Put Under Military Regulations.

Social and economic conditions in Germany have undoubtedly been greatly disturbed by the war, but a lofty determination to continue to do all things in the regular way is indicated in an article in a late copy of the Elberfeld (Prussia) Kurier, concerning the proper demeanor of the present street railroad employees toward their superiors, remarks the Cincinnati Times-Star. The situation is not without its humor, since the present employees are women, and it is insisted upon that they shall not cheerily respond "Good morning" when a superior greets them, but shall remain silent and respond only with a correct military salute.

And, if one may judge by the manner in which the subject is treated in the Kurier, it is considered one of serious importance. The various orders on the subject issued by the street-railroad officials are published in full. "In accordance with the regulations of our administration," the principal order reads, "female employees must salute their superiors by laying their hands to their head covers. It is ordered that on all our lines female conductors in uniform must salute in military fashion. This order now applies to all of our employees. When a superior greets a subordinate female employee with 'Good morning,' the correct reply is not 'Good morning,' but the respectful raising of the hand to the head cover, in silence. If the employees in question do not observe this regulation, they will be dismissed."

There is something of the inevitable feminine in the communication which a committee of the employees sent to the street-railroad officials upon the promulgation of this order. "Inasmuch," they said, "as we do not know how to salute in correct military fashion, and as a salute incorrectly executed would indicate disrespect in as great a measure as spoken words, such as 'Good morning,' it is respectfully requested that the company shall provide for the instruction of the employees by some competent authority in the matter of saluting in correct military fashion."

CAN WEIGH ENORMOUS LOAD

Track Scale Recently Installed Would Seem About the Limit of Mechanical Skill.

At West Albany, N. Y., one of the eastern railroad companies has installed a track scale which is theoretically capable of accommodating a 1,650,000-pound load. It is 100 feet in length and is an assemblage of six weighing instruments, each designed to have a capacity of 275,000 pounds. The load applied to each section is transmitted to an additional lever and through it to a weighing beam housed on one side. The scale is one of the largest of its kind ever built and is employed in weighing locomotives and other rolling stock. Engines of the Pacific type weigh about 215 tons, but it would take four of these piled on top of each other to overload the scale. The reason for designing the mechanism for such a great capacity was partly to insure its permanent adequacy. Tests have been made which show that the variation between the different sections is less than ten pounds.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

Railroad Construction Camp.

Some recent pictures show some aspects of railroad construction. The Buffalo, Rochester & Pittsburgh is one of those railroads which believes that good care of its employees is one of the most important details in the operation of a railroad.

The location of a camp receives the personal attention of both the labor agent and the roadmaster, who carefully consider the location from the point of view of proper sanitation and an ample supply of pure spring water.

The foreman and commissary clerk exact cleanliness on the part of the laborers, neglect in this matter being sufficient cause for dismissal. The use of tents equipped with steel bunks gives sanitary conditions much better than were the old methods of using camp cars and wooden buildings, which it was impossible to keep clean.

Most Crooked Railroad. Over California's Tamapais runs the crookedest railroad in the world. Of the eight miles of track the longest tangent is only 413 feet. In one instance the road makes five complete loops and ties two complete bow knots to attain an elevation of 90 feet. The end of the line is about half a mile higher than the starting point, and there is not one particular steep grade in the entire system.

Woman's Way. "My wife won't read any out of town papers." "Why not?" "Every time she picks one up she reads of a perfectly delightful house for rent, hundreds of miles away."—Kansas City Journal.

Sense of Humor. "Have you any sense of humor?" "We ought to try not to have," replied Miss Cayenne. "It is sometimes a mistake to laugh at a man because he looks funny when he is proposing."

MICHIGAN BREVITIES

Big Rapids.—Mr. and Mrs. Enoch Whittemore of Clare township have been celebrating their sixty-second wedding anniversary. They have been members of the Baptist church 50 years.

Ann Arbor.—F. W. Hawkhurst, for 30 years a resident of Detroit, died at the home of his son, M. M. Hawkhurst, 719 Church street. During his residence in Detroit he was prominently connected with Masonic lodges and Muskegon.—Arthur Stuck, twenty years old, died at Hackley hospital as the result of an accident which occurred the evening of September 9 when he was struck by an automobile driven by J. T. Winke, a local bus driver.

St. Ignace.—Two thousand two hundred hunters have crossed the straits of Mackinac since election to hunt deer. Indications are for a greater number of hunters than last season. Reports indicate plenty of deer, but no birds.

Birmingham.—Stuart Cobb, twelve years old, was struck by an automobile as he was crossing Woodward avenue here and was cut about the head and bruised, but not seriously injured. The machine was driven by Harry Hedding.

Adrian.—The flocks of sheep in Adrian and Raisin townships, which were affected by a disease which has puzzled local and state veterinary officers, are recovering. A small number of the sheep died, but the rest show no ill effects at present.

Kalamazoo.—Andrew Moore, convicted several weeks ago in circuit court of manslaughter, was sentenced to serve two to fifteen years in Jackson prison. Recommendation is made that Moore be released at the expiration of the minimum period of sentence. Moore was found guilty at his trial of causing the death of Isadore Pelonx, a farmhand in Alamo town ship.

Standish.—Lansing E. Lincoln, seventy years old, a farmer of Arenac county, is dead at Omer, as a result of a fall in a store there. He struck his head on a floor, and never regained consciousness. He had been representative in the state legislature and held many other prominent offices. He leaves a widow, two sons and a daughter.

Grand Rapids.—Three robberies took place in Grand Rapids hotels. Chris Jensen of Grandville left $50 under his pillow in his room and went out on the street. The money disappeared. Joe Lewis, an Indian, of Pe-tooskey, hid $14 in his bed. The money was stolen. William Johnson of Rock-fole told the police he was enticed into a hotel by a stranger, beaten with a beer bottle and robbed of his watch and $3.

Jackson.—Frank Fitzpatrick, serving a 40-year sentence at Jackson prison for second degree murder, escaped from that institution. Fitzpatrick made a ladder of a board and with this reached the roof of the tailor shop. Proceeding over the roof, he reached the roof of the east wing cell block. He carried a rope, which he fastened to a window in the chapel, and slid to the ground. He was sentenced from Alger county in February, 1910, and is thirty-three years old.

Marquette.—Gust Linfors, wanted by the authorities for a series of game law violations, committed suicide, a short distance from his shack on the Escanaba river, 15 miles from Ishpeming. Linfors, with two brothers, was arrested by deputy game wardens charged with being a member of a gang whose violations are alleged to have covered considerable territory for the last ten years. The men were ordered to appear in an Ishpeming justice court and it is believed he worried over his arrest.

Marquette.—John E. Longacre, a milk man of Marquette, was burned to death when the hunting camp he owns near Forrestville, ten miles from the city, was destroyed by fire. The cause is unknown. Longacre left here for Forrestville with his horse and buggy, presumably for a few days' deer hunting. Early the next morning hunters in nearby camps saw smoke coming from Longacre's camp and on investigation found the camp in ruins and the bones of the man and his horse among the smoldering debris.

Big Rapids.—George Curtis and a companion, fifteen and sixteen years old, both of Flint, were held in the county jail awaiting the arrival of their parents. The boys were caught at Paris by Special Officer Jones of the G. R. & I., but one of them drew a revolver on the officer. It is said, and they escaped to Reed City. The boys had two guns, two revolvers, dirks and flashlights. They said they were going north after small game, and that they ran away from their homes because they fell behind in school work.

Three Rivers.—Johnny Egglio, a four-year-old child, was drowned in an old cistern here. His mother, who is employed at a laundry, missed the child. After a half-hour's search workers found the lad's body in an old abandoned cistern near the Three Rivers house.

Ann Arbor.—Frank Shepperd of Pittsburgh, Pa., was locked up in the county jail on a fugitive from justice warrant. His wife, Mrs. Frank Shepperd, left home with a warrant for her husband, and the man was found in Ypsilanti. Shepperd is a foreman for Erwin & Leighton of Detroit.

Calumet.—Elen Salmi, the eleven-year-old daughter of August Salmi of Copper City, was drowned in the first skating accident of the season. She was skating on a ditch near her home when the ice broke.

Jonesville.—The soldiers' monument, built by means of subscriptions of the Women's Relief corps and other organizations here, was dedicated by Rev. George Cleaver of the Presbyterian church. The monument, placed in the center of the public park, is of white marble. Members of the G. A. R. posts of Hillsdale and surrounding towns, attended the ceremonies.

The Tongue and Typhus. According to F. Remlinger, quoted in the Journal of the American Medical Association, an infallible method of telling whether a patient has typhoid (or paratyphoid) or the much more serious typhus, is to ask him to "put out your tongue." The typhoid or paratyphoid patient does it without effort, but if he has typhus he cannot get it beyond his teeth.

Not Really an Escape. We often think that, if we had been placed in the same difficulties which we see overwhelm others, we could have got out of them. Just so; we might have squeezed, or wriggled, or crept out of a position from which another who would not stoop could not have escaped. PROPULSION BY HAND POWER

Ingenuous Citizen of Far West Not Bothered by Cost of Gasoline—Uses Novel Device.

When a certain ingenuous citizen of the far West goes for a jaunt with his little canoe he forgets all about the rising cost of gasoline and engine trouble and propels himself up and down stream with a hand and foot-operated boat of his own construction.

Hand levers are connected with a crank which carries a gear, and this meshes with another gear which drives the propeller shaft.

Pedal cranks are connected with the same crank which is operated by hand levers, so that the boat can be driven by foot as well as by hand power. In this way the operator can use either one hand or two hands or both feet together. The apparatus weighs about forty pounds.

NOW HAVE AERIAL INSURANCE

German Company Issues Policies Covering Damage to Property Caused by Bombs From Airships.

A German insurance company has organized a department of aerial insurance. This company is issuing policies covering damage to all property, real or movable, caused by explosive bodies or other objects thrown or falling from flying machines or caused by airships or aeroplanes themselves in making voluntary or involuntary landings, or parts thereof falling from them. The policies, however, make no provision for injury to or loss of life. It is said that numerous air raids over German cities and towns near the battle fronts, particularly in the West, have caused a demand for such policies.

She Was Shopping. She had been sitting in the furniture shop for nearly two hours, inspecting the stock of linoleums.

Roll after roll the perspiring assistant brought out, but still she seemed dissatisfied. From her dress he judged her to be a person of wealth, and thought it likely she would have a good order to give.

When at last he had shown her the last roll he paused in despair. "I'm sorry, madam," he said apologetically, "but if you could wait I could get some more pieces from the factory. Perhaps you would call again."

The prospective customer gathered her belongings together and rose from the chair. "Yes, do," she said, with a gracious smile, "and ask them to send you one or two with very small designs, suitable for putting in the bottom of a canary's cage."

Nothing Like Preparedness. As Mary was clearing the table she remarked shyly to her mistress: "Please, mum, I'm thinking I'll have to give you notice."

"Notice, Mary!" exclaimed the lady of the house, in surprise. "But what for? Why do you want to leave?" "Oh, mum," said Mary, twisting her fingers coyly together, "I'm thinking about getting married!"

"And who is the happy man, may I ask?" questioned the mistress, her interest in a love story promptly roused. "He—he sits across the chaperon from me."

"And what's his name?" "I don't—don't know" confessed the maid.

"What! You're surely not engaged to marry a man whose name you don't know?" "Not exactly engaged, mum," corrected Mary, "but he's been looking at me, and I think he'll soon be speaking!"
