Women and want ads go together. The ladies love the money they can make with Observer Want Ads. That's why it's time to remind them again this month to save the Observer carrier collection receipt their husbands receive when they pay for this month's hometown newspaper. The receipt is worth its face value toward an Observer Want Ad. And if you have your coupons from April and May, put them together with June's and you'll have a totally FREE want ad! What could be more exciting than that?

TELEVISION COMMENTATOR LOU GORDON (left) received a standing ovation from Plymouth High School's 607 graduating seniors Thursday night as the principal speaker at commencement exercises when he emphasized, "If I were a kid, I would be mighty hostile, too." Discussing what he called the "inverse standards of justice in this country," Gordon told a

He called for more understanding and tolerance between youths and their parents and decried "getting hung up on drugs." (Observer photos by Bob Woodring).

"And it works--it's common sense and it really works." said a still rather surprised Julie Haverty.

THE COURSE is described by Don Dinwoodie, Family Y director, as "a pretty good thing we've found to offer the community."

Originated eight years ago by Dr. Thomas Garden in Pasadena, the course is based on his book, "Parent Effectiveness Training," and is taught at the Family Y by four trained instructors, Dinwoodie, Mrs. Rosemary Pulick, a Livonia mother, Bob Caplan, a Livonia school social worker, and Armand Vigna, a counselor at Franklin High School.

A 45-minute orientation class will be held at the Family Y, Stark north of Schoolcraft, at 8 p.m. Monday,

The new course then will be conducted for four weeks, with two classes a week, Mondays and Thursdays from 9 to 11:30 a.m. and from 7:30 to 10 p.m.

"WE ARE OFFERING both morning and evening sessions so that both husband and wife can attend even though there are baby-sitting problems," Dinwoodie said.

The charge, he added, is $50 per person or $85 for a couple. and scholarships now are available. The course is limited to 15 persons and Dinwoodie said it includes a "supportive follow - up structure-we'll meet as long as the participants want."

That has meant a reunion meeting for the class attended by the Havertys and Mrs. Bradley-and all three seemed to think another was due soon.

"The reinforcement of talking to other parents is good," Jim Haverty said. "My my ideals, and I have many relapses."

"But at least we know now what we should do," his wife added. "We may feel guilty when we don't do it right, but we keep trying."

THE COURSE, Dinwoodie said, covers learning "active listening" to what a child has

A PAINTING called "Early Spring" by Mrs. Eugene (Johnnie) Crosby of Plymouth has been on exhibit in two recent area art shows. It is now in the 25th annual water color exhibition of the Michigan Water Color Society at the University of Michigan Museum of Art. It was also in the Scarab Club water color show in Detroit. The painting is a collage using real birch bark and water colors. Mrs. Crosby has also had several of her works accepted by the Michigan Artrain.

Tunex, winner of the 78th running of the $100,000 Metropolitan Handicap at Belmont Park on May 31. Tunex beat such great handicap stars as Native Royalty. Never Bow, Bushido, Personality and Fast Hilarious and has to be considered as a top contender.

Judgable, winner of the $75,000 added Grey Lag Handicap at Aqueduct on April 24 who also is the winner of three other stakes this year. He was shipped in earlier in the week and looms as one of the horses to beat.

All in all the 23rd running of the Mile could develop into one of the best in the long series. There isn't a standout but several evenly matched speedsters.

THE MILE is known as the one stake that has produced more upsets than most any other... the story could be the same here with a comparatively unknown crashing through the stretch and wearing down the favorites. The big race will go off some time between 6 and 6:30 p.m. and is expected to attract the season's largest crowd and produce another $2 million handle. It has in the past and all indications point to another record making day again this

About The Ecology

Watch during the two years of construction of the Observer Newspapers plant can relex now; the ecology of their domain not only has been preserved, it has been heightened.

From the very beginning, Publisher Philip H. Power was determined that every effort be made to maintain the natural beauty of the 38-acre ONI site. In his charge to landscape designer Betty Frankel the emphasis was on creating a plan that would blend into the backdrop of the surrounding forest just as Mother Nature might have selected herself, and this the special Observer columnist has accomplished.

Selecting myrile as the groundcover (which led to 29,000 individual plants being placed along the north and west sides).

Mrs Frankel also has called for plantings of rhododendrons, cotonesster shrubs and both dogwood and red maple trees in her over-all landscaping plan. As Bernard Margolis and his workers of the Power philosophy was expressed in the words, "News-brought the Frankel design into being, it has become obvious that the environment of nature has prospered.

The Power philosophy was expressed in the words, "News-brought to themselves. We felt we had an obligation both to the principle of ecology and to the community to do all we possibly could to preserve and even to enhance the site. Our landscaping, fitting into the mature beech and maple forest, does just that."

Journalistic Excellence A Commitment To

Jur Land... To Preserv

As ecologists of coming years speed pell-mell along that ribbon which will be the 1-96 Freeway through the heart of Observerland, they would do well to tarry at the juncture of School-craft and Levan and examine the diversification which provides its distinctive character.

When the southeast quadrant of that intersection was selected as the site for the new home of Observer Newspapers, pleasant and prideful neighbors came with it.

There is considerable in this special ONI dedication edition about the preservation of ONI's own 38 acres as a garden spot with its beech and maple forest, plus landscaping designed for an eye-pleasing and natural blend so ing the verdant woodland, the last such virgin stand in the area. But now those same bulldozer and grader operators who were accustomed to working on barren urban sites can proudly boast that not even a sapling was lost around three sides of the Observer building's perimeter. that the new and the old become one.

True, at the beginning it was considered a big order when contractors were challenged to complete the ONI construction without disturb-

 Mounted high on the sides and rear of the building are photo-cell controlled lighting fixtures which project light out into the dense wooded area around the building, giving protection as well as asthetic interest.

 Use of unusual lighting fixtures, dimmers, and adjustable lighting on a track in the lobby ceiling for special art illumination coordinate with the functional yet unique architecture of Observer's new building.

 The expertise of Cates electricians and the cooperation of Don Cates, Sr. and his management team had a great deal to do with meeting the scheduled moving date in mid-February of this year.

The Observer Newspapers organization publishes seven newspapers serving seven suburban communities in the northwest corridor of the Detroit metropolotan area. They are the Livonia Observer, The Plymouth Mail & Observer, The Farmington Enterprise & Observer, The Southfield News & Observer, The Redford Observer. Each of these newspapers is carefully adapted to meet the individual needs and different natures of each of these seven communities, so often inaccurately-16-mped together as "the Livonia is Michigan's fifth largest city. Plymouth boasts a proud colonial heritage and architecture. Farmington combines the best of the past with a thriving today. Southfield is becoming the growth center of the metropolitan area. Redford Township is the state's largest incorporated township. Garden City features fine homes and tree-shaded streets. Westland looks forward to enormous industrial growth.

One is growth. According to the 1970 census, population of the area served by the Observer Newspapers was 501,409, an increase of 83.1% over the 1960 census.

Another is high income. The 1970 census showed that the communities served by the Observer group constitute one of the highest average family income groups in the state, and retail sales figures were equally impressive.

Yet another is community involvement. For example, survey research indicates that 99% of people interviewed during the survey shopped regularly in the Observer circulation area.

Taken together, the seven communities served by The Observer er Newspapers consitute the highest income, mostgrapidly growing. largest market area in the state.

THIS MARKET AREA is also pretty big -- 165 square miles!
-- and to select the best possible site for the new Observer plant was a tough job.

After six months of research and investigation, a 40-acre site at the intersection of Schoolcraft and Levan Roads in Livonia was selected.

 It lay near the center of the Ottserver Newspapers circulation area, making it possible for reporters to cover late-breaking stories with a minimum of delay. The site met a number of important criteria:

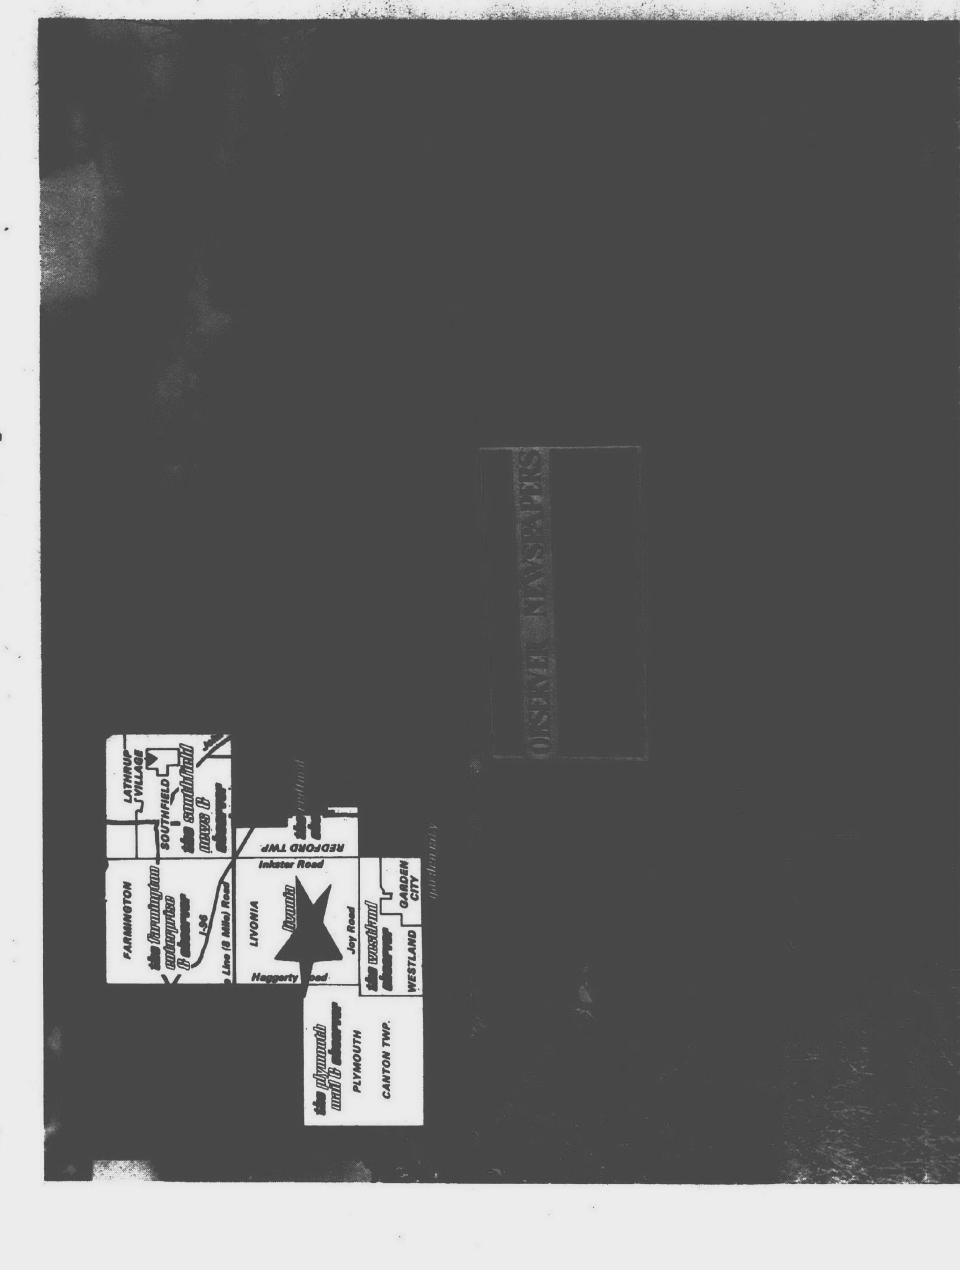

• It was located right on Schoolcraft Road, which by 1972 will become the east-west I-96 freeway, with entrance and exit ramps right at Levan Road. In addition, the site was less than two miles from the I-275 expressway, which will run hortly and south along Haggerty Road, linking I-94 on the south with I-696 on the north. This put the new Observer plant no more than a 20 minute ride away from any house in the circulation area, insuring the latest possible news and advertising deadlines and enabling the Circulation Department to rush newspapers to homes literally hot off the

So when in February, a sign went up announcing Observer
Newspapers intention to build on the new site, folks in the organization couldn't conceal a sense of growing excitement.

Maintenance And Securit 24-Hour Necessity

Efficient maintenance and airtight security are essential in the functions of a building the size and complexity of the Observer Newspapers structure.

The building was designed to need little maintenance, with a minimum of tile and a maximum of carpeting to make daily and nightly cleanups easier and quicker.

But it is necessary to maintain crews around the clock to adequately take care of the items necessary for most efficient operation.

The day staff devotes considerable time to a check of the heating, air conditioning and compressor equipment.

There are hundreds of dials and controls that require constant scrutiny to make certain every part of the modern, computerized machinery is operating properly.

ALL WASTE matter must be cleared from the press room immediately after the run. Tons of paper must be received daily, unloaded, and placed in the huge paper storage stock room.

The loading docks must beclear at all times for circulation trucks to pick up the newspapers that go into the seven communities covered by the Observer Newspapers.

In addition, the day crew, under the supervision of Herb Allen, handles all items shipped out and received daily.

And that's only part of it. During the winter months it is the job of the maintenance department to clear snow from the 200-car parking lot as well as from all exits, entrances and the dock-loading area.

THEN THE night crew comes in to clean all of the carpeted sections, which include the administrative section of the building and accounting, advertising, editorial and composing departments.

They then swing into the wing that includes the circulation department and the 88-seat cafeteria, both of which are also carpeted.

The day and night crews also have the responsibility for the 18 live plants placed throughout the building and for the landscaping around the north and west sides of the structure.

SECURITY IS taken care of by the Rader Security Alarm Inc. under the supervision of president Tim Heikka and his staff.
Radar Security Alarm offers two systems -- rader and wireless. It gives foolproof protection for modern businesses. Both systems operate without 'wires; both are used at the new Observer plant.

et's Eat

Excellent food for all at most reasonable prices is the aim of Langford's, food service management operators and consultants since 1915, who have charge of the beautiful 88-seat cafeteria in the new Observer Newspapers Inc. building.

And that goal has been attained in the weeks since the building first Langford's specializes in home cooking with a new menu daily, served in a manner that makes meals appetizing to all.

The equipment, the most modern available, was installed and is owned by Observer Newspapers Inc.

The operation is partially subsidized by the company to make meals and snacks available to employes at economical prices.

The nearest outside restaurant is more than a mile away and the air-conditioned cafeteria gives workers a chance to have an excellent funcheon or dinner in comfortable surroundings where they can eat and relax at the same time.

Langford's was selected by the Observer Newspapers Inc. to operate the affeteria because of its success in and cafeterias in businesses and industries in the midwest and its highly successful operation of 55 cafeterias in midwest high schools and colleges.

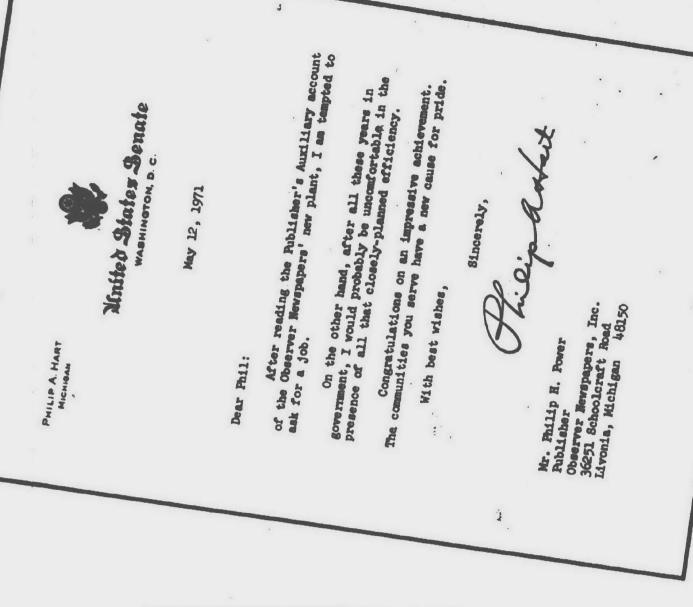

The daily menus are selected to go with the time of the year. In the humid days of the summer, light meals and luncheons are offered while steaming hot, palatable dishes mark the daily offerings in the cold of

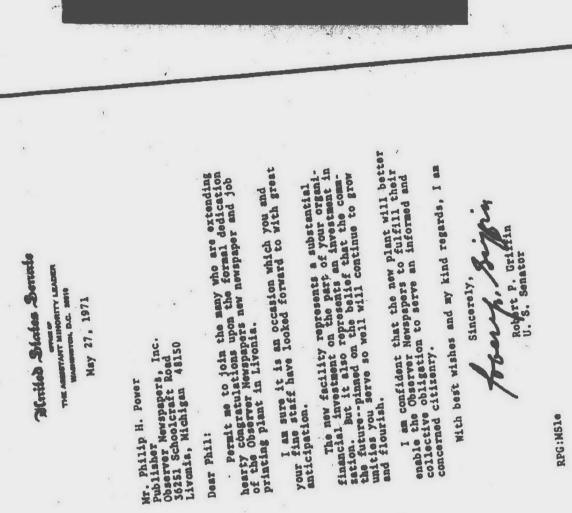

There have been nothing but good words for the operation during the months the Observer staff has been in the new building and has been using the cafeteria.

And the 88 seats insure seats for employes at all times since a staggered schedule has been set up in the various departments so that not all are eating at one time.

There isn't any question that it has met the goal of "excellent eating with reasonable prices in a comfortable setting."

Circulation Efficiency Stresses

Whoever first said that "there's nothing as old as yesterday's news." never worked in a newspaper circulation department where the day never passes that there aren't requests for past editions, a situation which demands the most efficient possible system of filing and finding.

The back issue circulation morgue of Observer Newspapers includes copies of all seven ONI publications of the past 13 months at any given time, after which each edition is converted in its entirety to microfilm. This necessitates a file, not a pile.

ONI, in its new building, has whipped the space problem and has coupled the solution with ideal indexing, by turning to Lundia Fullspace movable storage units that are mounted on rail-riding carriages that are easily rolled by hand, left or right, to create their own aisle space between

In brief, when such an aisle is created it does the job of six that might have been permanently placed between standard shelves, and there has been at least a 50 per cent gain in the use of floor space.

This special moduler storage system makes it possible for any of the circulation staff to pick out a back issue instantly, in place of shuffling through a stack in growing irritation because the copy sought is not on top. It is just one of the many features which make the ONI publishing home the most modern in its field.

And Developmen Observer History. A Record Of Gros

Of The Future The Newspaper

Any old-time printer walking through the new plant of Observer Newspapers on production day might sniff the air frequently wondering what it is besides the smell of newness that he finds so different.

His eyes would show him that the grime of the composing room of his day is gone, and at last he would realize that what also has disappeared is the unique odor of melting lead.

The newspaper business has experienced more technological changes in the past five years than in the previous 500, and the Observer Newspapers plant is a living laboratory of all that is new.

The "hot metal" processes used in older plants throughout the nation have changed little generation after generation, even though presses have whirled faster and faster to the point that just carting the finished papers out of the way has become a technique all its

But to step from the newspaper plant that still is tied to "hot lead" to the Observer is like switching from a propeller-driven aircraft into a sleek jettiner.

Or, like swapping an iron-bound, wood-burning stove for a gadget-loaded range that stirs a pot untended.

Such are the comparisons that might be drawn to indicate the giant stride in technology taken by Observer Newspapers to build a vigorous family of publications to serve one of the fastest growing areas of America.

Sure, we, too, used to have machines that poured molten lead over metal letters to form a line of type -- and we followed all the ancient procedures that tradition dictated to put a newspaper at the customer's door.

But now it's different. The age of the computer is here, but only the threshhold has been crossed. The years may be expected to bring refinements that make today's miracles of publishing pale in comparison. ONI is ready.

Today, using photo-composition and offset in contrast to the hot and tedious processes of yore, a keyboard operator copies stories into perforated tape something like roller piano music. This tape is fed into a computer for re-processing.

Then it goes through a photo-composer machine that produces sheets of printed matter of the desired width.

One obvious advantage of this procedure is speed -- for instance, a photo composer can produce five times faster than a tape-driven hot metal linecaster.

To tell it another way, the Observer's modern computers now can process more than 10,000 words per second. The computer also adjusts the words and spaces between them to fit the width of a newspaper column and then translates the commands into "language" readable by high speed photo typesetting machines which generate type at speeds undreamed of only a few years ago.

Johann Gutenberg (c. 1398-1468) could have been remembered by his friends only as a goldsmith who owned a well-stocked wine cellar and once was sued for breach of promise.

Instead, the world generally credits him with being the inventor of printing from movable type about 1440. Whether he actually was the first to combine the necessary components of type production, ink manufacture, a press and paper into a workable system.

Gutenberg's amazement might know no bounds if he were to see today's automated, computerized ONI plant, certainly the most advanced newspaper production system in this area.

But he also might realize that nobody has yet invented a machine to replace the reporter or the advertising space salesman.

Hot Off The Press

Observer Newspapers

As the printed newspapers come out of the automatic tying machine, the key thing is to save time and make work easy for Observer staff! Minutes saved at this point can make all the difference in getting your hometown newspaper to your door hot off the press.

A conveyor belt takes the tied bundles to a loading chute, where they are automatically bumped off onto an electric boom conveyor. This conveyor can be pulled out from the outside of the mailing room by any one of the 65 drivers who take bundles of papers to carrier boys.

The boom extends into the back of the driver's truck or station wagon, and the bundles--automatically counted and in the proper order--flow smoothly and quickly into the vehicle. A few quick adjustments in the stacking of bundles. and drivers are off on their routes, rushing your paper to the

The outside of the mailing room at Observer Newspapers' new plant is protected from bad weather by a wide overhang. With the speed of the press and of the mailing room, there is no unnecessary waiting around by drivers. Once they arrive, they get their bundles and are on their way, quickly and smoothly.

Mailing Room From The

Oddly enough, the mailing room of a newspaper is not where newspapers are mailed. Rather, it is the place where papers are counted, bundled, tied and dispatched to trucks waiting to rush them to carrier boys.

Observer Newspapers' new mailing room is highly automated and capable of considerable future expansion.

As newspapers are printed and leave the press, they are carried by a conveyer system through the wall of the press room and into a Cutler-Hammer counter-stacker.

This large machine automatically counts the newspapers into the required bundle size (usually 100's), stacks them into neat piles, and shoves them onto another conveyor. The counter-stacker can eventually be driven by a computer, producing exactly the number of papers required by each carrier boy although this is not being done at the present time.

THE BUNDLES of newspapers are top-wrapped for protection as they move along the conveyor, and just before they reach the automatic tying machine a bottom wrapper is added automati-

Plastic strapping material is automatically wound around the bundles and fused into a tight seal by heat. Plastic is more reliable then hemp rope and less dangerous to carrier boys' hands than old-fashioned wire.

After passing through the tying machine the tight bundles move along another conveyor, ready to be loaded into trucks and station wagons.

The significance of an automated mailing room, such as that at Observer Newspapers, is that it saves time, making sure that the papers get from the press to the carrier boys as quickly as possible. Usually your hometown paper reaches your carrier's house less than 45 minutes after it is printed.

Creative Engineering Building Features

The oldest engineering firm in the United States -- one which has a history of success dating back to 1832 -- designed the ultramodern new facilities of Observer Newspapers, Inc.

In retaining Lockwood Greene Engineers of New York, Publisher Philip H. Power knew he had the services of an organization which not only possessed the experience of thousands of design projects but also the special skills which are demanded in planning a newspaper plant.

Lockwood Greene's first newspaper project was in 1925, when the firm designed the Brooklyn printing plant for the New York Daily News, and since then its assignments for publishing firms has run into the hundreds.

In fact, so active has Lockwood Greene become in this specialty through the years that its staff in the Graphic Arts Department is made up on engineers particularly attuned to department functions, inter-departments in the publishing field.

Designer and project manager for the ONI undertaking was knud Rasmussen, who has done more than 40 newspaper projects in recent years -- the last six of which hy has spent as a key member of the Lockwood Greene organization.

Rasmussen was a newspaper consultant for 10 years prior to joining Lockwood Greene, and since completion of the ONI building already is deep into plans for another new newspaper structure in California.

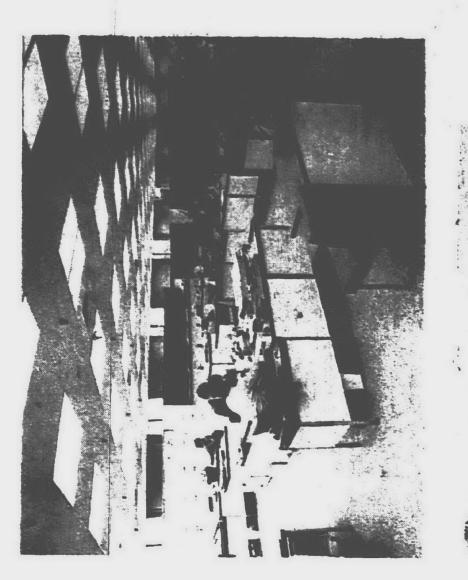

Rusmussen studied engineering at the University of Minnesota. University of Wyoming and Oregon State University, and majored in architecture at the University of Omaha.

"Our design plan was to allow us the smoothest possible copy flow, coupled with the easiest possible expansion and re-arrangement for our predicted growth center," said Power in praise of the conception developed by Rasmussen and his colleagues.

Rasmussen based his drawings on the "open office" concept, this concept of openness being kept in mind to provide for maximum speed and efficiency in correlating the work of all departments.

The 15,000-square-foot central office area is built to house editorial, advertising, accounting and composing operations. There are no walls or partitions, areas being separated by files and furniture arrangement which will lend themselves to easy re-arrangement as the need arises through growth and expansion.

Key in the design concept has been employe comfort and convenience, conducive to maximum yet enjoyable productivity, and in the eyes of those who work in the ONI family Lockwood Greene and their many associates in construction have accomplished their goal.

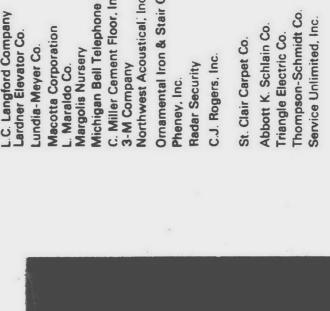

If ever there was a successful team effort, it was in the construction of the new publishing home of Observer Newspapers. Inc.

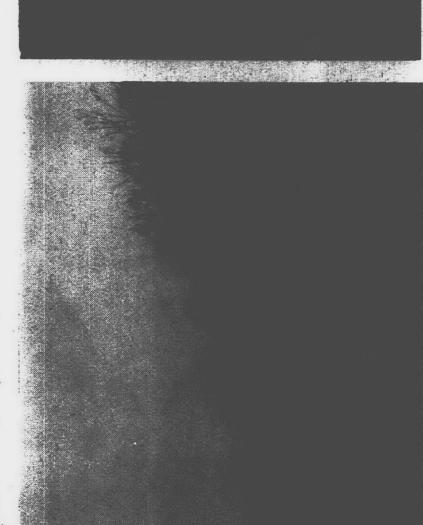

Ground was broken on Feb. 22, 1969--but obviously many. many hours over a long period of time had gone into planning before even that pivotal point was reached. They were a drop in the bucket compared to the man-hours extended from many sources during the two years that followed.

The building that now stands at Schoolcraft and Levan Roads in western Livonia, and into which the more than 160 ONI employes moved in February 1971 from seven separate and highly scattered offices, was anything but a one man show.

True, Publisher Philip H. Power and his executive staff were at the top rung with Lockwood Greene Engineers, the designers, and the Barton-Malow Co., which was the general contractor.

However, the uniqueness of a newspaper publishing plant -- particularly one as modern as ONI's -- required participation of a myriad of specialized sub-contractors, each experienced and skilled to the point that that firm's responsibility would be discharged to perfection and blend anughy into the total concept. Together it was a job well done. ONI lists them proudly:

Mechanical Systems Maintain Comfort

Observer Newspapers

The guta-of any modern building lie in its mechanical systems: air handling, heating, ventilation, plumbing, and air conditioning.

Glanz & Killian, of Dearborn, handled the mechanical side of the new Observer Newspaper pers building, successfully meeting the design and installation challenges of the highly precise needs of the complex newspaper operation.

The entire building is air conditioned, for employe comfort and to make sure that the environment for delicate computers and phototypesetting equipment is always constant.

Air handling, heating, and chilling equipment is located on the second floor of the building, together with the majority of the elaborate instrumentation needed to control the system, installed by Johnson Control Company, of Detroit.

Ductwork moves heated or cooled air to all areas of the building, on demand and provides a quiet, even flow throughout.

Paper is delivered to Observer Newspapers, new central facility in enormous rolls, 60 inches wide, 42 inches in diameter, weighing around 2,000 pounds. From one such roll, approximately 15,000 8-page regular newspapers can be printed.

WHEN THE paper is unloaded from trucks which back up to the truck leveler at the new Observer building, it is brought into the paper storage area, where it is carefully checked for flaws and then stacked one roll on top of another into tall columns.

Before printing, the paper is brought from the paper storage area into the press room, where the protective cardboard covering is stripped off on the stripping dock. It is then ready to be carefully placed on the reals of the press.

BEARD NEWSPRINT Company, of Detroit, is an important supplier of newsprint to Observer Newspapers. Operating from their large warehouse facilities, Beard dispatches trucks carrying rolls of newsprint to the Observer building nearly every day.

This paper must have been properly stored by Beard, because paper that is too dry will be brittle and break on the press. Paper that is too wet will take ink poorly and produce a poor

Should the Observer need a special stock for a particular job of commercial printing, the resources of the Beard Newsprint Company are available, making instantly obtainable anything ranging from colored stock to an especially white sheet for high quality work. PAPER STORED in the Observer storage area is under carefully controlled temperature and humidity conditions.

In addition, a periodic inventory of rolls is taken, to make sure that paper is used up promptly and does not sit around for a long time and get brittle or yellowed.

In 1968 Barton-Malow purchased the assets of Mead and Mount Construction Co., one of Deriver's oldest contractors and one of the largest firms in the Rocky Mountain area.

Mead and Mount was established in 1924, the same year as Barton-Malow began operation. Known for building 40 per cent of Denver's famous downtown skyline, Mead and Mount's scope of Operations in the west is very similar to Barton-Malow in the eastern and middle United States.

Both firms are progressive and widely known for major commercial, institutional and industrial construction.

Equipped and staffed to move any job from blue print to completion, the Barton-Malow organization includes all of the diversified talents necessary to handle any type of project, small or handle and staffed to move any job from blue print to completion.

The Barton-Malow Co., general contractor for Ubserver Newspapers, new publishing plant, is a diversified nationwide organization which for 47 years has been solidly involved in the building of metropolitan Detroit.

The company is presently serving a major role in environmental control construction, including such projects as these:

Grosse Pointee-Clinton Authority Retuse Incinerator in Mt. Clemens Township, the Detroit Board of Water Commissioners Scum Incinerator Building, the Detroit Metro Water Department Sludge Filtration and Incinerator Building and the Central Wayne County Sanitation Authority Refuse Incinerator additions in Dearborn Heights.

Complete Barton - Malow and Mead and Mount Division projects include the Water Filtration plant in Allen Park and the $17 million Metropolitan Sewage Disposal plant in Denver.

Other import of projects include these major air transport facilities in the Detroit and Denver areas:

United Airlines Flight Training Center at Denver's International Airpode, called the best equipped commercial pilot school in the world; the Frontier Airlines Operation at Denver in plus the $4 million United Airlines and percent at Denver, plus the $4 million United Airlines and office buildings, parking and institutional structures, educational and medical care complexes and a long-standing specialty of major automotive and general manufacturing fecilities.

Barton-Malow's current list of active construction projects is indicative of the company's successful commitment to this diversification effort.

Current projects include Burroughs Corp. World Headquarters, Detroit: St. Joseph Mercy Hospital additions and alterations. Barton-Malow has been firmly committed to community projects that benefit residents of all the area of metropolitan Detroit.

Construction of such major projects as the Ford Motor Co. Woodhaven Stamping Plant, General Motors Proving Ground Safety Test Building in Milford, Research Laboratories Computer Center in Warren, the Children's Hospital project in Detroit, the Henry Ford Centennial Library, plus many others, stand as evidence of this fact.

Barton-Malow also has a strong foundation for future service and growth.

The company has a record of more than $1 billion in service since 1924, serving more than 600 clients in the successful completion of upwards of 30,000 jobs in general construction, maintenance, modernization, building repairs and equipment instal-

Than A Place Much More To Work

Publisher Philip H. Power's charge to the interior designers for the Observer Newspapers' new building was, "The most important key to our organization is our people, and I want our new building interior designed to be much more than a place to work - a pleasant environment where people will enjoy working and feel at home."

The Contract Division of the J.L. Hudson Company was selected to do the interior design for Observer Newspapers' new building, because of their professional expertise, their vast selection of fabrics, wallcoverings, carpeting and furniture, and their tremendous purchasing power.

NEAL CRANDALL, Diane Rehn and Pete Donaldson of Hudson's Contract Division faced three basic challenges in the space planning and interior design of Observer Newspapers.

• First, to gather together in one new central building six previously scattered old, run-down, overcrowded office facilities. This meant changing the "pack rat" atmosphere to a pleasant environment where people would enjoy working and feel at home.

• Second, to make the space planning totally flexible for a growing organization such as Observer Newspapers, allowing for maximum change at minimum cost, giving them room to grow, expend, adjust and adapt.

• Third, to make the new building efficient and yet unique, unlike any other printing facility in the world.

Hudson's answer to these challenges?

You'll see it on these pages, in the Observer building and in the end result - what this new building is really all about - better hometown newspapers for our readers and advertisers.

THE DESIGNERS began more than two years ago, spending many months talking to Observer department directors and individually to nearly all of the 160 employees, getting to know them, their part in the newspaper operation, learning their work station needs, studying the paper flow, and finding out what kinds of office equipment and accessories each employee needed to do his job efficiently.

Indeed, this process involved learning the entire operation of a newspaper from the time a reporter writes his story to the time that the carrier boy delivers the paper on the front porch of your home."

Slowly the design and the warm, earth color concept began to evolve and was presented to Observer department heads by scaled drawings, sample fabrics, carpeting and wallcoverings on color boards, and visual selection of furniture and accessories.

The designers specified and approved the selection of fine carpeting used in the offices in the Administration wing and all other private offices, which was supplied and installed by Manny Gorman's St. Clair Carpet Company of Livonia.

OBSERVER MANAGEMENT specified that the general core area - consisting of 15,000 sq. ft. and accommodating four separate departments and over 100 people - should have no partititions, thus allowing for flexibility and expansion, a radical departure from customary newspaper design.

Hudson's plans ignored the old "bull pen" type of desk placement. Instead, their concept resulted in groupings of two, three or four employees at work stations, planned so that each individual has adequate file space, desk and typewriter "L", and storage space at his finger tips. Verbal contact is maintained with those employees necessary to his work, and yet he has the privacy he needs.

Separation between Editorial, Advertising, Accounting and Composing Departments was accomplished by the positioning of files, wardrobe cabinets, decorative wood screening, color panels and live plants.

In an area this large and serving over 100 employees with 85 telephones tinging, eight perforating keyboards, 50 odd typewriters banging and general conversation, there was genuine concern over the potential noise level.

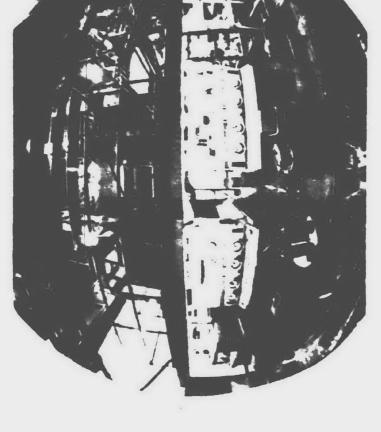

Hudson's accoustical answer to that was carpeting (wallscaping) on the walls, in addition to carpeting on the floor and draperies at the 10 foot wide windows. The result is minimum noise.

And the environment?

Ask Observer employees. They're surrounded by beautiful live plants. They have all the tools they need to work with. They have spacious, efficient work areas. They have attractive, quiet, rest areas. They have a music system. They have a beautiful, low cost subsidized by the company - cafeteria. They can each see the woods from the windows.

It's quiet. Relaxing. A good place to think...and grow.

Much more than a place to work.

What's black and white and read all over?

Remember the old riddle? And the answer -- a newspaper?

The reference to black and white accurately described the use of color in newspapers for many years. In the 1930's, however, color started to appear in newspapers and printing technology developed, it graduelly became possible to print spot color lie, one color) ads or news columns.

Now, with the development of highly refined offset newspaper presses, such as the Goss Metro at Observer Newspapers' new plant, it is possible to print in one, two, or three colors in a newspaper on a regular basis.

THE PRESS at the new Observer plant has a special color printing unit, often called a " half deck " It, allows piacement of color on virtually any page in the paper, just as it makes it possible for several different colors to be placed on different pages without any loss in the total page capacity of the press. Special plates are made -- one for each color -- and ink is transferred from the plates to the blanket to the sheet of newsprint in the same menner as normal black ink offset printing is accomplished.

Obviously, special care must be taken if the color work is to be of high quelity, but the Observer's crew of highly trained pressmen are more than up to the task.

IN ADDITION, the quality of the ink used in offset color work is crucial to the success of the job.

The Flint Ink Company, whose corporate head office is right in the Observer circulation area -- Redford Township -- has played a vital role in helping the paper develop its color capability to the present high point.

Working with the skilled ink chemists at the Flint office, Observer production teams have run many experiments designed to identify the best kind of ink for the job. Things like viscosity, tack I stickiness I, and color opacity of the ink are critical to good color press work, and the Flint Ink Company specialists are constantly at work making improvements.

color ADDS a special dimension to a newspaper.

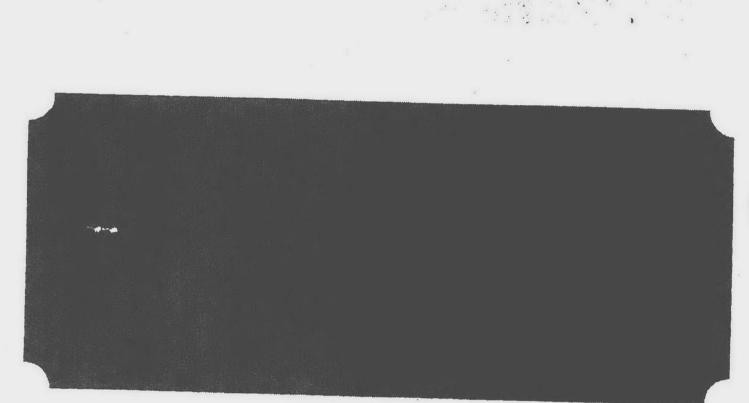

Countless experiments have proven that an ad printed in color will draw many times more customers to the advertiser's store than the same ad printed in black and withte.

And just developing is the use of color -- either spot or full -- in the news columns of the newspaper.

Color can set a mood, accentuate a high, bring out a feeling.

With the new equipment at Observer Newspapers, you can expect your home town newspaper to stress the creative use of color even more than in the past.

In today's journalism, the typewriter and telephone are the most important tools of any newspaperman, but dependency upon the telephone as the link with the outside world goes far beyond just thewalty news room.

Circulation, display and classified advertising, billing and a host of other departments also regard the telephone as their right arm, which in the case of the new Observer Newspapers' plant has more "muscle" than that of any other Michigan newspaper.

The total communications concept system installed in the ONI building by the Michigan Bell Telephone Co., is designed not just for today, but for tomorrow's growth -- no matter how fast or how great.

THE CIRCULATION department has its own separate lines for its heavy volume of telephone calls. With seven newspapers serving an equal number of communities, this department handles more than its share of important calls, expeditiously.

Observer Newspapers

As you read these very words, taking it as a matter of fact that, yes, they are printed on a sheet of paper, little does the average Observer subscriber realize that the product in his hands quite likely stems from woodlands in the watersheds of the Sault-au-Cochon and Bersimis Rivers, 180 miles east of Quebec.

That is the source of most of the wood used by Anglo-Canadian Pulp and Paper Mills. Ltd.. whose products are sold by Montmorency Paper Co.. Inc. to ONI.

Observer Newspapers' current weekly consumption of newsprint amounts to 100 tons, meaning the use of approximately 5.200 tons for a full year.

A constant inventory of some 200 tons is maintained in the huge storage area adjacent to the press room, replacement deliveries being made every few days.

les being made every few days.

When one realizes that the printing surface in just one ton of newsprint would blanket 10 football fields, it is possible to gain some conception of the enormity of the paper supply necessary for publishing the seven Observers.

Anglo-Canadian has been one of Canada's major producers of newsprint for more than 40 years. The mill, located in the heart of the historical city of Quebec, was completed in 1927, with an original capacity of 125,000 tons per year. Since then, on-going modernization of the four paper machines has increased this capacity to more than 300,000 tons of newsprint annually.

The growth of Anglo-Canadian has not been limited to newsprint. The company is a member of the Reed Paper Group of London, England, and has expanded and diversified steadily.

With sales offices focated in Montreal. Toronto, Quebec, Winnipeg, New York and Chicago, Anglo-Canadian's products are shipped throughout Canada and the United States, to South America, the United Kingdom and Europe. Annual net sales now total close to $100 million.

While newsprint is one of the most vastly used forms of paper, it is only one of about 7,000 different kinds, leading to the oft repeated assertion that paper is "the handmaiden of civilization." Communication, industry and governmnet would be unable to operate without paper, all of which dates back to a discovery in China in A.D. 105.

The ancient Egyptians used papyrus for making a writing material, cutting stalks of the reed into thin slices and then pressing them into sheets. The Chinese used silk and bamboo, and then under Emperor Ho-Ti it was found that the inner bark of the mulberry tree could be broken into fibers and pounded or matted into a sheet. The Chinese later found that good paper could be made by pounding rags, hemp and old fish nets.

This art of papermaking spread gradually to other parts of the world, but it was virtually a thousand years before papermaking became known in Europe. Still, it was not until 1798 that there was an invention (by a Frenchman) of a machine that would make paper in continuous rolls, rather than small batches, and rag pulp still was the base

The process of grinding logs into a fibrous pulp was discovered in 1840 by a German named Keller and the modern papermaking industry has its beginning at that time. Today, millions of tons of paper and paperboard come from the mills every year and in the United States alone the consumption is estimated at more than 430 pounds per person every year.

Observer Newspapers

Roll 'Em Getting

An offset press as complicated as that at Observer Newspapers involves a lot of planning and preliminary work to run efficiently.

Before anything happens, a press production schedule has to be made out, jesting forth the times the press will be run, the products it will produce, and the press will be run, the products it will produce, and the press vill be run, the products it will produce, and the needs for paper, ink, and manpower.

Plates are delivered from the platemaking department to the pressroom according to a carefully planned schedule. Their position on the press is outlined in a detailed diagram by Joe Eckhout, pressroom foreman, before the plates are carefully locked into place on the plate cylinder.

THEN THE big sheets of newsprint stretching 60 inches wide must be brought up from rolls of paper in the reel room below the press deck, through the printing upits, over and around the appropriate compensator rollers, and into the folder. The highly skilled Observer press crew then makes all necessary adjustments in ink flow and control settings even before the press is started up.

At first when the papers start coming off the folder there is much work and adjustment to do. Ink must be darkened here, water reduced there; the folder must be adjusted, and the image moved to the right spot on the page. Color density may need changing, and the pictures must be registered perfectly to make sure they are sharp and clear.

ONLY AFTER the most careful scrutiny and checking does the press crew signal the mail room that the product is perfect and the run is ready to begin.

Michigan Bell consultants, designers and engineers recommended that ONI turn to the Bell System's new 300 Series, and its installation here marks its lifest use by a Michigan publisher.

The genius behind the 300 Series is that by utilizing what appears to be a conventional telephone instrument, without an array of buttons or lights, it provides:

• Any station add-on conferencing. By simply hitting the instrument switch hook button, the caller is put on hold. When a third party is dieled, and the button tapped again, a three-party conference call is established automatically.

• Any station transferring. The "hold" procedure again is followed. Then the party to whom the caller is to be transferred is dieled. When the party to whom the call is to be transferred is dieled. When he answers, the party who originally answered hangs up and the call is transferred automatically.

How Offset Printing Works

The workings of the offset printing process at the new Observer plant are really very simple. The basic principle to keep in mind is very old: Oil and water do not mix.

To start with, the offset printing plate is perfectly smooth, unlike the letterpress plate which uses raised metal surfaces to pick up ink and transfer it to paper.

Those parts of the offset plate which were not exposed to the intense light of the plate burner will attract water when the plate burner will attract water when the plate burner will attract water when the plate passes over a water-covered roller in the press. Those parts of the plate which were exposed, however, chemically repell water.

WMEN THE prepared plate is put on the press, it is locked onto a large printing cylinder which rotates the plate first against a water-covered roller.

The water adheres to the unexposed areas of the plate and is repelled by the exposed areas. When the plate then rolls against the ink covered roller, the ink (which is made with an oil base) sticks to the plate where there is no water (the exposed areas) and is repelled from the plate where there is

The ink dries as the web of paper moves through the press, over large metal formers that put in the center fold, and into the folder, where the paper is folded across the front and cut to the proper size.

FROM THIS explanation, it's easy to figure out why offset printing is better than letterpress.
Offset plates are lighter than the heavy metal ones used in letterpress, allowing more precise tolerances in the design of the press.
Further, when a page is composed in letterpress "hot type," an intermediate step before making the plate involves pressing a heavy paper mat down over the page. This results in

The plate continues to rotate, pressing against another large cylinder dovered with a thin rubber pad, called a blanket. The ink on the plate is transferred (offset) onto the rubber blanket exactly as it was originally laid down on the plate.

IT IS from this rubber blanket that the ink is at last transferred to the web of paper passing through the press. The blanket cylinder barely "kisses" the paper web, leaving a crisp, sharp printed in an analysis.

ing a less sharp image than in offset.

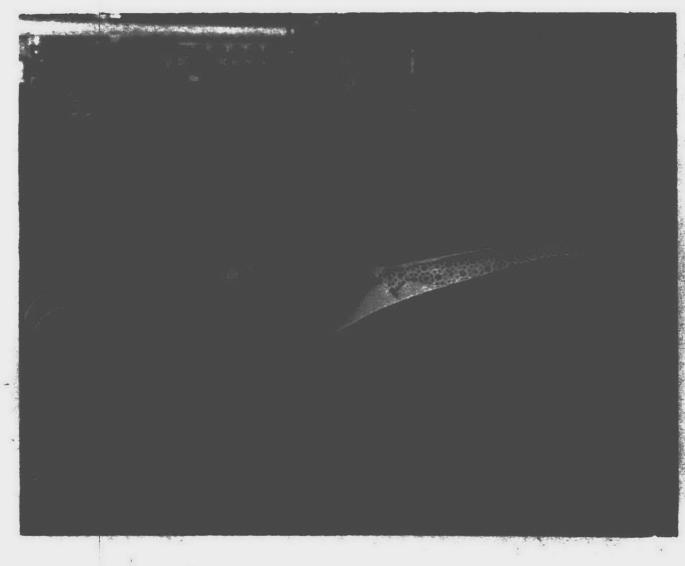

Lastly, when a letterpress plate transfers ink on its sarface to the web of paper, it does so with enormous force, often crushing the paper and leaving blurred edges around the type and making the pictures less sharp than offset.

Speed, Quality Offset Press Combines

The new press installed at Observer Newspapers' central plant is the largest, fastest offset press at any Michigan newspaper.

The Observer chose offset printing over the usual letterpress pecause of its many advantages:

• Pictures printed by offset are sharper, clearer, and have more snap;

• Offset printed type is darker, crisper,

Color, whether printed as one color in an advertisement or as a full color picture, is much brighter and more faithful to the original subject;
Offset ink does not smear as much as letterpress ink, keeping the readers hands cleaner.
With all these advantages, it may be wondered why more newspapers do not use the offset process.
It's more expensive than letterpress, for one thing, but Observer Newspapers believes that its readers deserve the quality of printing that offset can bring. Another reason is that offset printing only works effectively in a highly automated, air conditioned, sophisticated plant -- precisely the kind of building the Observer organization built.

THE NEW Observer Goss Metro press can print newspapers at a speed of up to 60,000 per hour. It can run papers as large as 64 pages, with as many sections as eight. It can print full color illustrations or single ("spot") color advertisements at virtually any place in the product.

It can print 115,000 copies of seven Observer Wednesdey editions in less than 12 hours, or it can be equally as efficient in printing high-quality. Iong-run commercial printing, such as the Cunningham Drug Store chain's monthly circular.

The press was erected by the George R. Hall Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, in a specially air conditioned press room carefully designed to accomodate the 15 foot wide, 42-foot long, 28-foot high installation. The Hall specialists worked carefully with Goss engineers to set the 150 ton weight absolutely level on a solid concrete press pad eight feet deep.

The Hall erectors used special chain hoists set on rails mounted on the ceiling of the 40-foot high press room to maneuver and properly place the press elements, some of which ver and properly place the press elements, some of which weighed over 10 tons.

Also of great help to the effectiveness of the new press is an ink tank system, design help for which was received from U.S. Ink Co. Fully loaded ink tank trucks slide into position at the dock, connect a hose to an outside fitting, and pump ink directly into two 1,500-gallon ink tanks located next to the press control

Ink from these tanks is then pumped in a closed system directly to the press, without ever running the risk of scumming because of contact with the air. This, together with the special ink injection system with which the press is fitted insure constant ink flows and high quality presswork.

A PRESS AS sophisticated as that at Observer Newspaper must have an elaborate but highly reliable electrical system. This was provided by the experts at Triangle Electric Co., of Detroit which has been serving the newspaper and construction industries since 1925.

Triangle specialists helped install and fit the 440-volt wiring for the five 60-horsepower motors which drive the press. These motors generate a lot of heat, and over 40 tons of air conditioning are required to keep the heat and humidity constant in the new Observer press room.

Triangle specialists also wired the "reels, tensions and pasters," which are units which automatically splice the and of a web of paper from an expiring roll onto a new roll. Run by a small computer, these devices sense when the expiring roll is getting near its end, drive the new roll of paper until its surface speed is equal to that of the old roll, and automatically cut the web from the old roll and paste it down onto the new one -- all

The new Observer Newspapers building features perhaps the most automated platemaking department of any Michigan newspaper. (Illustration 1) This provides both speed and quality, as the number of variables formerly determined by inaccurate equipment has been sharply reduced.

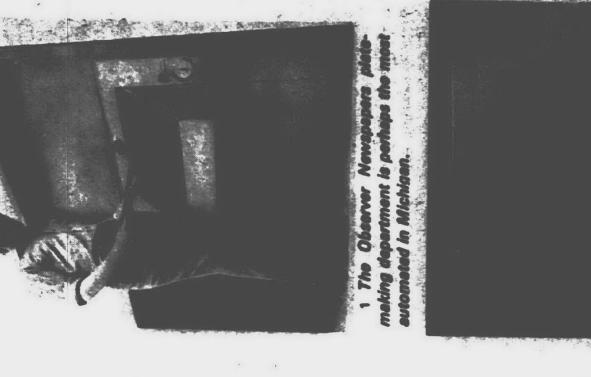

The picture of the camera-ready page is automatically processed and emerges as a page negative in the platemaking department, where it is checked for flaws and then placed on a flat (Illustration 2). Small holes have already been drilled automatically in the film, and these "registration holes" are carried right through onto the plates, to make sure the ink prints exactly in the right place when the plate is put on the press.

THE NEGATIVE is placed on top of a sensitized aluminum plate (illustration 3) and held in place by a vacuum. The top of the plate maker then is flipped over, exposing the plate to strong light from an arc lamp, which shines through the transparent parts of the page negative to expose or "burn" the plate underneath. Those places that are exposed will eventually print when the plate is put on the press.

The exposed plate is then run through an automatic plate developer (Illustrations 4 and 5), which scrubs chemicals into the plate at a constant and precise rate. The finished and developed plate is then ready to be put on the press.

Back up equipment enables platemakers to process plates by hand, should the automatic plate processer break down.

The main advantage of the new Observer platemaking department is high speed and constant quality control. Around 45 plates per hour can be put through the department, with uniform quality control, with the savings in time translated into later deadline news for the reader.

Camera Room Stresses High Quality, Speed

Newspapers produced by "cold type" have superior pictures and crisper type than papers produced in the old "hot type manner. At Observer Newspapers, an important part of this quality difference lies in the camera room, where the pasted-up pages are photographed. This system does away with the time-consuming step of making zinc engravings of each page. The time saved means Observer readers get fresher news in each paper.

The grid sheet with type properly pasted up on it (called "camera ready") is sent to the camera room, where it is placed (Illustration 1) on the copy board of the new Chemco horizontal camera. The camera is nearly 20 feet long, enabling it to take pictures of an entire newspaper page, and it is virtually automatic (Illustration 2); exposing the film, cutting the film for page size, and adjusting the light are all controlled from a central panel. Exposures are carefully determined by using a densitometer (Illustration 3, to make sure pictures in the paper are as sharp as possible.

The camera is capable of making up to 60 page negatives per hour (Illustration 4). This speed means Observer Newspapers can wait longer to photograph a page, which in turn means later deadlines news for the reader.

All Together Putting It Paste

The strips of type on photographic paper from the phototype-setting machines must be put together in the exact form which the advertiser or page editor wants. This is called paste-up.

Before this can be done, however, all type is proofread (illustration 1) by a team of skilled spellers to make sure no typographical errors appear in the paper. Any type with mistakes is sent back to have correction lines set.

THE PROOFREAD and corrected type is then pasted onto a grid sheet (Illustration 2) the size of a newspaper page. The peste up process (often called keylining) follows exactly the design the advertiser specifies for his ad or the placement of headlines and stories on the page called for by an editor.

Special paste up stations (Illustration 3) were designed for the new Observer building, including light tables which tilt and move up and down, a cutting board, and a waxing machine which coats the back of the strips of type with wax to attach the type to the grid sheet. These stations provide a comfortable working environment for the keyliners, which in turn results in faster and neater paste up

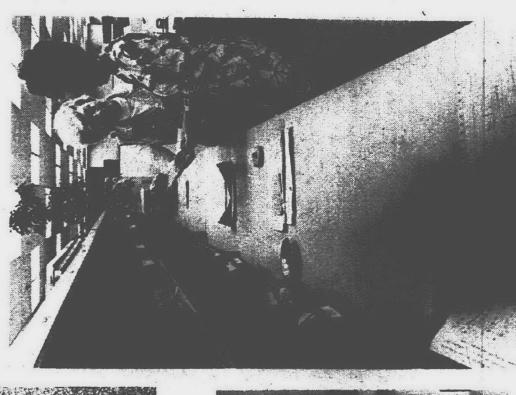

One major advantage of pasting up advantsements in this manner is that pieces of type or pictures can be moved around on the grid sheet exactly as the advantser specifies. For example, a headline can be placed at an angle in cold type paste up easily; but in the hot metal process, limited as it is by the rigid right angles of the slugs of metal, slanting copy is time-consuming and difficult.

Advertisements are pasted up first, and then placed on the grid sheets. News stories and headlines are then sorted (Illustration 4) and placed on the grid sheets according to the editor's design.

IN PUBLISHING seven different papers, Observer Newspapers found that sorting and filing copy for each different paper was a difficult systems problem. Working with the experts at the Lundia-Meyer Company, of Toronto, and the systems designers at the D.F. Fraser Company, of Detroit, a modularized sorting and storage sytem was developed for the composing room at the new building.

The Lundia-Meyer system provides great flexibility, allowing the system to be changed as improvements are made, and enables editors and composing personnel to find quickly and accurately exactly what copy is needed for a given page.

The last step in the paste up process is quality control. Proofreaders and editorial staff carefully examine (Illustration 5) every page after it is pasted up to make sure there are no mistakes. Only when they have signed their approval that the page is perfect is it deemed good enough to get into an Observer newspaper.

6 Quality control is critical throughout the process, as Elly Graham and Pat Pitera know.

The way photocomposition machines work is simple. Images of the various letters of the alphabet in a variety of type styles are contained on a rapidly revolving drum. Impulses from the perforations on the paper tape flash a light in synchronization with the letter passing by on the drum and record the image on photographic paper. The size of the image of the letter is determined by various lenses through which flashes pass: the style of type to be used is set by whichever part of the drum the light flashes through.

It is sometimes called "cold type," to indicate that the type is set by a photographic process and to distinguish it from "hot type" composition, in which type is produced by a linotype machine pouring hot molten type metal over molds to form a line of type.

The ad and its insertion order are then sent to a mark up station (Illustration 2), where the layout and copy for the ad are carefully examined. The Editorial Photographic department is staffed with fine professional photographers, and is equipped for maximum efficiency and highest quality. Three darkrooms were built, to allow simultaneous development of film and printing of pictures, enabling local photographs to be included in the paper right up to deadline.

The Lysinger staff, located at 14949 Schaefer Road, Detroit, provide the Observer photographic department with film (more than 400 feet each week), photographic paper and chemicals.

A photographer is an editor's right arm when it comes to clearly and completely telling readers about their own hometown, and this skill at visualizing a news story is no more critical than during photographic conferences, when pictures shot in the field are evaluated by editor and photgrapher and finally selected for publication in the newspaper.

The speed with which film and prints are developed and the quality of the final product are both essential to a good newspaper, and the new Observer photographic department is providing the tools for the kind of skillful photojournalism that readers have every right to expect.

Running A Business

'Too few newspapers pay adequate attention to the business side of their operations." says Observer Controller Duane Rosenthal.

'Our new building has enabled us to centralize our business functions so that billing, accounting, credit, payroll and report-generating are under proper control and organization."

Adequate desk and filling space, and a public service desk enable the accounting department to process the myriad of pieces of paper needed for proper financial control.

"Other department heads have instant access to the accounting department in our new building." Rosenthal adds. "making it possible for them to get solld answers in a minimum of time, without unnecessary paperwork. This is one of the keys to an effective management system."

lith A Computer

The use of computers in business has been fairly common for the past 10 years, but only recently have a few large newspapers made the leap to computers in their own operations. Observer Newspapers recognized in 1970 that effective use of computers was important to its development, and a general purpose computer was installed on a trial basis during the spring of that year.

The experiment proved successful, and a separate computer room was designed for the new building. Separated from the rest of the business office by tinted glass panels and with its own individual air conditioning system for proper temperature and humidity control, the computer room includes a central processing unit, two disk drives, two card punches, a card sorter and a line printer. A raised floor with removable panels allows instant access to electronic connections.

CURRENTLY, Observer Newspapers uses its computer for billing and sales reports, although other uses are under development.

In the case of billing, each customer is assigned a number and a rate per inch of advertising. This information is stored in the memory disk of the computer.

When a customer places an ad in the newspaper, information on the size of the ad, date of publication, and any other pertinent details are written by the salesman on an insertion order. The information on this order is then punched onto computer cards, which are then fed into the computer.

Automatically, the computer searches its memory disk to find the proper customer, calculates the size of the ad, and computes the proper amount to be billed.

The computer then prints out through the line printer on continuous roll forms the customer's name and proper billing address, the type and classification of the ad, the size of the ad and the date of publication, and the correct charge. Sales reports are then generated, often within minutes after billing.*

BILLING by computer gets bills into the hands of Observer customers more quickly than possible by hand methods, as well as evoiding human error in the computations.

A special time-sharing program (called SWAPR) was written by the Observer staff, to allow the computer to interrupt a billing program at virtually any point in order to set a "take" of type and then to resume the billing function.

For, at the Observer, the computer has a central part to play, not only in billing and accounting, but also in setting type through space-age computerized phototypesetting processes.
